Effective Property Tax Rates 2010:

Tax Bill as a Percentage of Property Value

Prepared by the Department of Local Government Finance
June 16, 2010

Introduction

Property tax bills in Indiana are calculated primarily based on the property's market value-in-use (or assessed value) and the local property tax rate. However, a number of other factors affect the final amount of taxes due. Property tax deductions may reduce the taxable value of the property below its market value. Property tax credits may refund some of the taxes charged. Finally, property tax caps may limit the amount of taxes a taxpayer must pay. All of these factors combine to determine effective property tax rate, which measures the property taxes billed as a percentage of market value-in-use.

Effective property tax rates are useful in a number of ways. In general, they can be used as a "bottom line" calculation of property tax burden that does not require a person to understand the complexities of deductions, credits, and caps. Policymakers can use them to study property taxation over time and across property types. The real estate industry can use them to estimate a tax burden based on a property's market value and intended use. Homeowners and business owners alike can use them to compare taxation levels across neighborhoods and evaluate the financial impact of a change in use of the property. Finally, local government officials can use effective tax rates to evaluate the proximity of their taxpayers to the caps since Indiana's property tax caps are applied as a maximum tax liability as a percentage of a property's market value-in-use.

The following report lists the effective property tax rate, by taxing district, for various categories of property. "Homestead" property is defined as an owner-occupied residence and up to one acre of land. These properties fall under the one percent circuit breaker cap. "Qualified residential" property includes apartment complexes and residential rental property. These properties fall under the two percent circuit breaker cap. "Other residential, agricultural, long-term care" property includes all residential parcels that are not used as primary residences or rentals, agricultural land, and long-term care facilities. These properties also fall under the two percent circuit breaker cap. "All other property" includes commercial and industrial property, as well as personal property. These properties fall under the three percent circuit breaker cap.

Key Findings

Please note that these findings exclude the following counties that have not yet submitted a property tax abstract for 2010: Clinton, Floyd, Lake, LaPorte, and White.

Effective property tax rates differ widely among taxing districts. The unweighted average[1] district rate is 0.53% for homestead properties, 1.74% for other residential properties, agricultural land, and long-term care facilities, and 1.98% for businesses and all other properties. For homesteads, the rates range from 0.00% in Wells County (the result of LOIT credits) to 1.29% in the South Bend and Mishawaka areas of St. Joseph County (the result of exempt debt). For other residential property, agricultural land, and long-term care facilities, rates range from 0.59% to 2.88%. For business and other property, rates range from 0.59% to 3.88%.

In 59 of the 1,853 districts included in this report, effective tax rates are above the tax caps. Districts may be above the tax caps due to the exemption of voter-approved property taxes for capital projects and school operating costs, as well as debt issued before July 1, 2008 in Lake and St. Joseph Counties.

Data and Methodology

In general, the Department relied upon property tax information submitted by the county auditor to simulate the calculation of property tax liabilities, taking into consideration typical deductions and the relevant credits and caps, for each type of property. The simulation then compares the tax liability to the market value.

This study uses the certified 2009 Pay 2010 tax rates from the property tax abstract for 87 counties. Five counties (Clinton, Floyd, Lake, LaPorte, and White) do not yet have an approved abstract and were therefore excluded from the analysis. The study also uses the abstract's assessed value and property tax credit information to calculate rates for each applicable property tax credit. This information is used to calculate a net tax rate[2] that applies to net assessed value[3]. To calculate the effective tax rate, the net tax rate is multiplied by the assessment ratio (the proportion of net assessed value to gross assessed value). This result is compared against the property tax cap amount (adjusted for exemptions where applicable) and the final effective tax rate is the lower of the two values.

For homestead property, the assessment ratio varies as a result of the flat $45,000 standard deduction. To arrive at a single effective tax rate for homestead property, the calculation uses the average residential gross assessed value for each taxing district. If a taxing district has no residential property, the statewide average is used to calculate the homestead effective tax rate. For all other property, we assume the property has no deductions and therefore the assessment ratio is equal to one.

[1] An unweighted average is one that gives equal weight in the calculation to all taxing districts, without regard to parcel counts, total assessed value, or any other factors.
[2] This is the tax rate net of the state homestead credit and all locally-offered credits funded from Local Option Income Tax.
[3] This is the market value-in-use net of deductions. For homestead properties, the standard deduction and supplemental deduction are applied. No deductions are applied to other properties.
