

The Process of Effective Instruction and Optimal Learning

Children learn by a different process than do adults. Most instructors teach as they were taught early in life. There can be a significant disconnect when trying to impart learning to the adult community. This presentations addresses the three types of learning, ways to be most effective in reaching the various kinds of learners, and how to identify which kind of learning you are. The kind of learner you are will tend to dictate the manner in which you teach. We don't want to be ineffective when dealing with the other two types of learners when we present.
