ALTRINSIC'S BOTTOM-UP INVESTMENT PROCESS

Altrinsic's investment team seeks to identify opportunities at the intersection of the three variables that drive stock price. As illustrated, the significance the firm places on these variables is indicated by their size. This process leads the team to two types of companies; the proportion of these two types of stocks in the portfolio is a function of the opportunities presented by the global marketplace at given points in time:

- » Type 1. Undervalued higher quality companies with more sustainable return on capital profiles
- » Type 2. Undervalued businesses in which profitability levels are depressed and/or are likely to improve
