Indiana Individual Income Tax
For The Tax Year 2013

NOTICE: IC § 6-8.1-3-3.5 and IC § 4-22-7-7 require the publication of this document in the Indiana Register. This document provides the general public with information about the Department's official position concerning a specific set of facts and issues. This document is effective on its date of publication and remains in effect until the date it is superseded or deleted by the publication of another document in the Indiana Register. The "Holding" section of this document is provided for the convenience of the reader and is not part of the analysis contained in this Letter of Findings.

HOLDING

Married Couple were Indiana residents for the tax year 2013 because after they established their domicile in Indiana beginning in 2004, they did not change their domicile to a different state. Married Couple thus were required to file their Indiana full-year resident individual income tax return for 2013. When Married Couple demonstrated that a portion of their income for 2013 was income earned in states other than Indiana, they would be entitled to a tax credit for income tax paid to other states for Indiana income tax purposes.

Taxpayers protest the Department's assessment of individual income tax for 2013.

Statement of Facts

Taxpayers (Husband and Wife) are individuals who bought a home and moved to Indiana in December 2003. The publicly available records showed that an Indiana homestead credit was claimed on that property since 2008. Husband changed his employment and leased an apartment beginning in July 2013 in Tennessee. Taxpayers' children continued living in that Indiana house and attended school in Indiana during 2013.

The Indiana Department of Revenue ("Department") determined that Taxpayers were Indiana full-year residents for 2013, that they did not file the Indiana income tax return reporting their Indiana income tax, and that Indiana income tax was due for 2013. Upon receiving the notice, Taxpayers filed an Indiana Part-Year or Non-resident Return (IT-40PNR) reporting that they did not have any income subject to Indiana income tax. The Department adjusted Taxpayers' filing, which resulted in an additional assessment.

Taxpayers timely protested the assessment. An administrative hearing was held. This Letter of Findings ensues and addresses Taxpayers' protest of the proposed assessment. Additional facts will be provided as necessary.

I. Indiana Individual Income Tax - Non-filer - Residency.

Discussion

The Department, based on verifiable information including Indiana real property records and records from the Indiana Bureau of Motor Vehicles, found that Taxpayers were Indiana residents for 2013, that they failed to file their Indiana Full-Year Resident Individual Income Tax return (Form IT-40), and that Indiana income tax was due for 2013.

Taxpayers disagreed, claiming that they did not live in Indiana during 2013 and were not required to file IT-40 return for 2013. Thus, the issue is whether Taxpayers were Indiana residents for 2013 and, as a result, they were required to file the IT-40 Form for 2013.

As a threshold issue, all tax assessments are prima facie evidence that the Department's claim for the unpaid tax is valid; the taxpayer bears the burden of proving that any assessment is incorrect. IC § 6-8.1-5-1(c); Lafayette Square Amoco, Inc. v. Indiana Dep't of State Revenue, 867 N.E.2d 289, 292 (Ind. Tax Ct. 2007); Indiana Dep't of State Revenue v. Rent-A-Center East, Inc., 963 N.E.2d 463, 466 (Ind. 2012). "[E]ach assessment and each tax year stands alone." Miller Brewing Co. v. Indiana Dep't of State Revenue, 903 N.E.2d 64, 69 (Ind. 2009). Thus, the taxpayer is required to provide documentation explaining and supporting its challenge that the Department's assessment is wrong. Poorly developed and non-cogent arguments are subject to waiver. Scopelite v. Indiana Dep't of Local Gov't Fin., 939 N.E.2d 1138, 1145 (Ind. Tax Ct. 2010); Wendt LLP v. Indiana Dep't of State Revenue, 977 N.E.2d 480, 486 n.9 (Ind. Tax Ct. 2012).

Indiana imposes a tax "on the adjusted gross income of every resident person, and on that part of the adjusted gross income derived from sources within Indiana of every nonresident person." IC § 6-3-2-1(a). IC § 6-3-2-2(a) specifically outlines what is income derived from Indiana sources and subject to Indiana income tax. For Indiana income tax purposes, the presumption is that taxpayers file their federal income tax returns as required pursuant to the Internal Revenue Code. Thus, to efficiently and effectively compute what is considered the taxpayers' Indiana income tax, the Indiana statute refers to the Internal Revenue Code. IC § 6-3-1-3.5(a) provides the starting point to determine the taxpayers' taxable income and to calculate what would be their Indiana income tax after applying certain additions and subtractions to that starting point.

For Indiana income tax purposes, resident "includes (a) any individual who was domiciled in this state during the taxable year, or (b) any individual who maintains a permanent place of residence in this state and spends more than one hundred eighty-three (183) days of the taxable year within this state . . . ." IC § 6-3-1-12; see also 45 IAC 3.1-1-21. Nonresident is "any person who is not a resident of Indiana." IC § 6-3-1-13.

45 IAC 3.1-1-23 explains further how "residency" affects a taxpayer's income tax liability, in relevant part, as follows:

(1) Taxpayer Moving to Indiana

When a taxpayer moves to Indiana and becomes a resident and/or domiciliary of Indiana during the taxable year, Indiana will not tax income from sources outside Indiana which the taxpayer received prior to becoming an Indiana domiciliary. Indiana will, however, assess adjusted gross income tax on all taxable income after the taxpayer becomes an Indiana resident.

(2) Taxpayer Moving from Indiana

Any person who, on or before the last day of the taxable year, changes his residence or domicile from Indiana to a place without Indiana, with the intent of abiding permanently without Indiana, is subject to adjusted gross income tax on all taxable income earned while an Indiana resident. Indiana will not tax income of a taxpayer who moves from Indiana and becomes an actual domiciliary of another state or country except that income received from Indiana sources will continue to be taxable.

(3) Nonresident Citizens

An individual from Indiana who is permitted to file Federal income tax returns as a nonresident citizen is considered as being domiciled in Indiana and his income taxable as a resident citizen, if he maintains a place of abode in Indiana immediately prior to residing in a foreign country as a nonresident citizen of the United States, and has not permanently established his domicile in a foreign country or in another state.

The fact that ordinary rights of citizenship, including voting at public elections are present but not exercised, shall not prevent a person from being classified as a resident if he meets the other tests set out in this regulation.

(4) Part-Time Resident Individuals

Persons residing in Indiana but living part of the year in other states or countries will be deemed residents of Indiana unless it can be shown that the abode in the other state or country is of a permanent nature. Domicile is not changed by removal therefrom for a definite period or for a particular purpose. A domicile, once obtained, continues until a new one is acquired . . . .

Recently, the Department revised the Adjusted Gross Income Tax regulations. Some revisions intend to clarify the definition of a person's domicile for Indiana income tax purposes and afford more considerations in determining a person's domicile. Thus, a taxpayer may benefit from the application of the new regulations when the taxpayer's domicile is in dispute. This Decision thus applies the new regulations accordingly.

45 IAC 3.1-1-22 (2017) states as follows:

(a) "Domicile" means a person's domicile is the state or other place in which a person intends to reside permanently or indefinitely and to return to whenever he or she leaves the place. A person has only one (1) domicile at a given time even though that person may be statutorily a resident of more than one (1) state. A person is domiciled in Indiana if he or she intends to reside in Indiana permanently or indefinitely and to return to Indiana whenever he or she leaves the state.

(b) A person is domiciled in a state or other place until such time as he or she voluntarily takes affirmative action to become domiciled in another place. Once a person is domiciled in Indiana, that status is retained until such time as he or she voluntarily takes positive action to become domiciled in another state or country and abandons the Indiana domicile by relinquishing the rights and privileges of residency in Indiana.

(c) In order to establish a new domicile, the person must be physically present at a place, and must have the simultaneous intent of establishing a permanent place of residence at that place. The intent to change one's domicile must be present and fixed and not dependent upon the happening of some future or contingent event. It is not necessary that the person intend to remain there until death; however, if the person, at the time of moving to the new location, has definite plans to leave that new location, then no new domicile has been established.

(d) There is no one (1) set of standards that will accurately indicate the person's intent in every relocation. The determination must be made on the totality of facts, supported by objective evidence, in each individual case.

(Emphasis added).

45 IAC 3.1-1-22.5 (2017) further outlines the factors in determining a person's domicile, as follows:

(a) The Department may require documentation from a person to evaluate domicile.

(b) The one hundred eighty-three (183) day and permanent place of residence threshold in IC [§] 6-3-1-12(b) and [\[45 IAC 3.1-1-21\]](#) is not a test for domicile.

(c) A person is presumed not to have abandoned their state of domicile and established a new state or other place of domicile in a given year if, during that year, the person maintained a permanent place of residence (whether as an owner, renter, or other occupier of the residence) in that state and the person did more than one of the following:

- (1) Claimed a homestead credit or exemption or a military tax exemption on a home in that state;
- (2) Voted in that state;
- (3) Occupied a permanent place of residence in that state or other place of domicile for more days of the taxable year than in any other single state;
- (4) Claimed a benefit on the federal income tax return based upon that state being the principal place of residence; or
- (5) Had a place of employment or business in that state.

A person may rebut this presumption through the presentation of substantial contrary evidence.

(d) If a person's domicile is not resolved by subsection (c), the Department may consider additional relevant factors to determine the person's state or other place of domicile, including the state or other place where the person:

- (1) Maintained a driver's license or government issued identification card;
- (2) Was registered to vote;
- (3) Registered a vehicle;
- (4) Claimed as dependents immediate family members who relied, in whole or in part, on the taxpayer for their support;

- (5) Assigned or maintained a mailing address;
- (6) Maintained bank accounts;
- (7) Maintained active membership in a religious, social, cultural or professional organization;
- (8) Received professional services; and
- (9) Kept valuables or family heirlooms.

This list of additional, relevant factors is not exclusive.

(Emphasis added).

Indiana law further defines "[h]omestead" as "an individual's principal place of residence . . . that is located in Indiana" and that "the individual owns . . . ." IC § 6-1.1-12-37(a)(2). "'Principal place of residence' means an individual's true, fixed, permanent home to which the individual has the intention of returning after an absence." 50 IAC 24-2-5. A taxpayer is entitled to claim a deduction, known as homestead deduction (or exemption), against taxes imposed on his or her homestead property pursuant to IC § 6-1.1-12-37(e). When the taxpayer is no longer qualified for the homestead deduction (or exemption), the taxpayer must notify the auditor of the county where the homestead is located within sixty days after the date of that change. IC § 6-1.1-12-37(f).

Thus, a new domicile is not necessarily created when an individual moves to a place outside Indiana. Instead, the individual must move to the new location and manifest an intent to remain there indefinitely.

In Croop v. Walton, 157 N.E. 275 (Ind. 1927), a taxpayer, Mr. Walton, who was domiciled in Michigan sold his home in Michigan and moved to a new residence in Indiana where he and his wife lived for several years for the benefit of his wife's health. Mr. Walton lived in the Indiana home "on account of the mental and physical condition of his wife, and continued to occupy it until such time as she could safely return to [Michigan] to live." Id. at 276. The court concluded that, based on the level of his activity in Michigan and lack of intention to abandon his domicile, Mr. Walton did not change his domicile from Michigan to Indiana. The court explained, in relevant part, that:

"If [a] taxpayer has two residences in different states, he is taxable at the place which was originally his domicile, provided the opening of the other home has not involved an abandonment of the original domicile and the acquisition of a new one."

'[D]omicile' . . . is the place with which a person has a settled connection for legal purposes, either because his home is there or because it is assigned to him by the law, and is usually defined as that place where a man has his true, fixed, permanent home, habitation, and principal establishment, without any present intention of removing therefrom, and to which place he has, whenever he is absent, the intention of returning.

Id. (Internal citations omitted)(Emphasis added).

In explaining the difference between "residence" and "domicile," the court in Croop stated:

'Domicile' "is a residence acquired as a final abode. To constitute it there must be (1) residence, actual or inchoate; (2) the nonexistence of any intention to make a domicile elsewhere." "The domicile of any person is, in general, the place which is in fact his permanent home, but is in some cases the place which, whether it be in fact his home or not, is determined to be his home by a rule of law."

"Residence is preserved by the act, domicile by the intention." "Domicile is not determined by residence alone, but upon a consideration of all the circumstances of the case." "While a person can have but one domicile at a time, he may have concurrently a residence in one place . . . and a domicile in another."

To effect a change of domicile, there must be an abandonment of the first domicile with an intention not to return to it, and there must be a new domicile acquired by residence elsewhere with an intention of residing there permanently, or at least indefinitely.

Id. (Internal citations omitted)(Emphasis added).

In State Election Bd. v. Bayh, 521 N.E.2d 1313 (Ind. 1988), the Indiana Supreme Court considered the issue of the meaning of "domicile" in determining that Mr. Bayh met the residency requirement for the office of Governor.

Mr. Bayh's domicile remained in Indiana even though he moved to different states for various reasons for many years. The court stated, in pertinent part:

Once acquired, domicile is presumed to continue because "every man has a residence somewhere, and ... he does not lose the one until he has gained one in another place." Establishing a new residence or domicile terminates the former domicile. A change of domicile requires an actual moving with an intent to go to a given place and remain there. "It must be an intention coupled with acts evidencing that intention to make the new domicile a home in fact.... [T]here must be the intention to abandon the old domicile; the intention to acquire a new one; and residence in the new place in order to accomplish a change of domicile."

A person who leaves his places of residence temporarily, but with the intention of returning, has not lost his original residence . . . .

Residency requires a definite intention and "evidence of acts undertaken in furtherance of the requisite intent, which makes the intent manifest and believable." Intent and conduct must converge to establish a new domicile.

Id. at 1317-18 (Emphasis added).

In this instance, Taxpayers moved to Indiana and have lived in Indiana since 2004. The Department determined that, based on publicly verifiable records, for the 2013 year, Taxpayers were domiciled in Indiana and therefore were full-year Indiana residents because in addition to periodically renewing their Indiana Operator Licenses, Taxpayers owned an Indiana house and claimed the Indiana homestead credit on that home.

Taxpayers, to the contrary, claimed that in May 2012, Husband accepted a job and moved to Tennessee. Taxpayers asserted that Husband lived in an apartment provided by his employer beginning in May 2012 and through July 2013 and subsequently leased an apartment there for the remaining 2013. Additionally, Taxpayers stated, from January 2013 through April [2013], that Wife went to care for her mother-in-law in Nevada, that Wife bought and registered a motor vehicle in Nevada, that Wife worked in Nevada while she stayed with her mother-in-law and, that Wife subsequently moved to live with Husband in Tennessee for the remaining of 2013. Taxpayers further explained that their children lived in that Indiana home attending school in Indiana. Taxpayers thus argued that they were not Indiana residents for 2013, that they were not required to file the IT-40 Form, and that they had no Indiana income for Indiana income tax purposes. Therefore, to determine whether Taxpayers were Indiana residents for 2013, the Department must first determine whether Taxpayers effectively abandoned their Indiana domicile and acquired their domicile in different states, such as Tennessee, prior to 2013.

It is well-established that Taxpayers lived in Indiana since 2004, that Taxpayers maintained their Indiana Operator Licenses, that Taxpayers purchased a house in Indiana, and that a homestead credit was claimed on their Indiana home during those years. When the homestead deduction was claimed, Taxpayers necessarily affirmed that the Indiana home is their "true, fixed, permanent home to which [they have] the intention of returning after an absence." Otherwise, Taxpayers were required to notify the county that they no longer qualified for the homestead deduction within sixty days after the date of that change. IC § 6-1.1-12-37(f). In addition, Taxpayers here did not rent their Indiana home; rather their children have lived there while attending Indiana state colleges and Taxpayers paid for the house maintenance expenses, including utilities, during 2013. When an unemancipated student (financially dependent) and the student's parents established they were domiciled in Indiana prior to the first day of the academic season for which resident classification was sought, the student was eligible for an in-state tuition benefits. Thus, there is a rebuttable presumption that Taxpayers were Indiana residents for 2013 because they were domiciled in Indiana.

To support their protest, Taxpayers offered copies of the following documents:

- Copies of Taxpayers and their children's W-2 statements for 2013 and 2014
- Copies of cancelled checks for an apartment, August 2013 through June 2015
- Copies of lease agreements (2015 and 2016) for an apartment in North Carolina
- Taxpayers' 2013 Tennessee return
- A copy of Simple Interest Vehicle Contract for Sale and Security Agreement
- A copy of vehicle registration with Nevada Department of Motor Vehicle
- Copies of W-2 Statements

Upon review, however, Taxpayers' reliance on their supporting documentation is misplaced. As discussed earlier, Taxpayers could have more than one residence and could be residents of more than one state, but they can only have one domicile at a given time. 45 IAC 3.1-1-22. In this instance, Taxpayers stated that Husband stayed in an apartment provided by his employer and Wife stayed with her in-laws. Taxpayers' supporting documentation demonstrated that Husband spent August through December 2013, presumably working in Tennessee while Wife stayed in Nevada to care for family. Their absence from Indiana during 2013 was temporary in nature. Further, Taxpayers' supporting documents showed that Wife (together with another person) financed a vehicle purchased and registered the vehicle in Nevada. However, that car registration alone was not sufficient to establish her intent to abandon her Indiana domicile, especially considering the facts (1) that Taxpayers owned the Indiana home, which a homestead credit was claimed, (2) that Taxpayers renewed their Indiana drivers' licenses, and (3) that their children attended Indiana state colleges and received in-state tuition benefits. Thus, Taxpayers' supporting documentation failed to substantiate that Husband or Wife intended to abandon their Indiana domicile. Taxpayers may spend some time living in a state other than Indiana during 2013, but they had not abandoned their Indiana domicile. Taxpayers continued to maintain their ties with Indiana. Without abandoning her Indiana domicile, Taxpayers were not able to acquire a new one in a different state.

As mentioned earlier, Taxpayers may also qualify as Indiana residents if they spent more than 183 days during 2013 in Indiana when they maintained a permanent place of residence in Indiana. IC § 6-3-1-12; 45 IAC 3.1-1-21. Since the Department concludes that Taxpayers were domiciled in Indiana, the question regarding whether Taxpayers spent more than 183 days of 2013 in Indiana is also moot.

Given the totality of the circumstances, the Department is not able to agree that Taxpayers met their burden of demonstrating that they were not Indiana residents for 2013 and thus they were required to file their 2013 Indiana Full-Year Resident Individual Income Tax Return (IT-40). It should be noted, however, that Taxpayers had W-2 income from Tennessee and Nevada. Thus, Taxpayers will be entitled to a tax credit in their 2013 Indiana income tax return for the state and local income tax they paid to those states.

In conclusion "[e]ach assessment and each tax year stands alone." Miller Brewing, 903 N.E.2d at 69. The Department is mindful that there is no one set of standards that will accurately indicate the person's intent in every relocation. Under Indiana law, mere ownership of Indiana property does not necessarily make that owner an Indiana resident for state income tax purposes. However, given the totality of the circumstances, in the absence of other supporting documents, the Department is not able to agree that Taxpayers met their burden of proof. Therefore, given a "case by case" review of Taxpayers' facts, documentation, circumstances, all of Taxpayers' income earned during 2013 was subject to Indiana income tax because after Taxpayers established their domicile in Indiana, their domicile remained in Indiana. Taxpayers thus are required to file Indiana IT-40 returns for 2013. To properly claim the tax credit paid to Tennessee and Nevada, Taxpayers must provide their Tennessee and Nevada return transcripts when they file their Indiana IT-40 return.
