

Contact your State Legislator

The Indiana General Assembly is the legislative branch of the State of Indiana. The General Assembly consists of 50 members in the Indiana Senate and 100 members in the Indiana House of Representatives.

The General Assembly meets for several months each year to pass new laws that affect Indiana citizens and their communities.

Legislators want to hear from their constituents.

Each day, legislators receive emails, letters and phone calls in Indianapolis and at home from constituents about state issues. This communication is important as it helps to inform legislators in their policy decisions.

I hope that this information helps you communicate effectively with your Indiana State Legislators. I look forward to hearing from you.

Sincerely,

Tips for Writing or Calling Your Legislator

Contact Legislators early in the legislative session.

January is the best time when all new bills are typically introduced.

Be brief and to the point. Focus on only one issue in each communication.

Identify a bill by number and title, if possible.

Find bill information at www.in.gov/legislative

Use your own words and stationary.

Include your return address and phone number in all communications (even e-mail).
