Mr. Upp,

Thank you for your response. Part of our concern was that after your email to the staff [REDACTED] said he told the class that someone was talking to the principal and telling what was going on in his class. Mr. DeMass then said he was going to find out who. Seems kind of like a theat and as we are sure you can understand it is an uncomfortable feeling.

Thank You,

Mr and Mrs [REDACTED]

Good morning Mr. [REDACTED]

I appreciate your email regarding the current situation in your student's government class. I did sent out an email to staff about being careful when discussing politics. However, teachers were asked to review their curriculums and make sure that they are staying within the guidelines of their academic standards. I have copied the Government standard to help explain the assignment Mr. DeMass has assigned to his students:

USG.5.6 Explain how citizens in the United States participate in public elections as voters and supporters of candidates for public office. (E)

I have also spoken with Mr. DeMass (yesterday), as well as a few students in his classes, about making sure that there is not any one sided discussion or any "campaigning" for one side of the other. The students I spoke have felt that Mr. DeMass is giving all students the same opportunity to share their viewpoints on these issues and does so without bias. In speaking with Mr. DeMass, he feels as if he is giving students opportunities to voice their opinions freely. Mr. DeMass and I also spoke about treading lightly on political views and conspiracy theories.

If you feel that this assignment is detrimental to your student's overall academic progress, we can alter the assignment in a way that can still meet the standard without infringing on her personal and political viewpoints.

I would ask that you email or call Mr. DeMass as well to allow him to explain any questions you may have concerning his class. This may clear up some of your concerns about his class. Thank you again for your email.
