Caseload Allocation Plans

Background

Ind. Administrative Rule 1(E), which became effective January 1, 2006, and was amended January 26, 2017, requires the courts of record in a county to develop and implement caseload allocation plans (CAP) that ensure an even distribution of judicial workload among the courts in the county. Pursuant to Ind. Trial Rule 81(C), the Indiana Supreme Court, Indiana Office of Judicial Administration (IOJA), has also published a "Schedule and Format for Adoption of County Caseload Allocation Plans" detailing when various counties must submit a plan and the sequence of steps toward approval of the plan.

Timing

The courts of record in a county must submit a plan, or revalidate the existing plan, not less than once every two (2) years. In the year a county must submit a plan, the timing of the process follows the schedule for adopting or amending local court rules under Ind. T.R. 81:

Trial Rule 81 Deadlines Applicable to Caseload Allocation Plans

DATE	EVENT
Prior to June 1	Submit text of the CAP to IOJA
June 1	Notice of Proposed Rule Published locally and on the Indiana Judicial
August 1 or before	Submit locally approved plan to IOJA

DATE	EVENT
July 1 – July 31	Trial Courts within a county or district must approve a final plan by not less than a 75% vote
August 1 – October 1	IOJA will review plans and make a recommendation to the Supreme Court for approval, modification, or rejection
October 1 or before	Supreme Court review and decision
November 1 or before	Revised plans due to Supreme Court
November 15 or before	Supreme Court review and decisions on any resubmitted plans
January 1 following year	Approved plans become effective

Plan Evaluation

Plans are evaluated by applying the distribution of cases defined in the county or district caseload allocation plan to the new filings reported by the courts of record within the county or district during the preceding year. Beginning in 2021, additional factors will be considered to determine the judicial need of a court:

- cases venued in or out,
- transferred in or out,
- the reporting judge acting as a special judge in another court,
- special judge service in the reporting court, and
- the time senior judges serve in the reporting court.

If applicable, additional judicial resources, such as the use of a magistrate, commissioner, or senior judges are then factored in for the appropriate court(s). This judicial resource number represents the “have” of the court. The “need” figure is divided by the “have” figure to produce an estimate of the weighted caseload utilization in each court, county, and district. The utilization variance is calculated by subtracting the lowest utilization in the county from the highest utilization in the county. Although the amendments made on 1/26/17 removed the prior requirement that all the courts in a county must be within a .40 variance of one another, IOJA may request a county or judicial district to explain any variance among the courts resulting from the county or judicial district caseload allocation plan. IOJA will presume the plans submitted were properly approved by the county or district.

How to Prepare a Caseload Allocation Plan

First, review your existing, approved plan contained in your local rule or rules that set forth your CAP. Next, examine the Weighted Caseload Measures Report to find the utilization of each of your courts in your county for the previous calendar year. IOJA posts this report on-line by April 15. The Weighted Caseload Measures (WCM) provides a relative weight or count, in minutes, for each case. The Weighted Caseload Measures Report is based on the prior year’s Quarterly Caseload Statistics Reports submitted by each of the courts of record. This research will provide you with the Utilization Factor for your court. Need ÷ Have = Utilization.

The utilization factor is the linchpin of the entire CAP process. It will show whether a court has a caseload well above capacity or if it is underutilized. In Indiana, the factors range from .34 to 1.53. A low caseload utilization figure does not mean that a court is not working efficiently or diligently, just as a high caseload utilization figure does not always mean a court is working exceedingly hard. Because these measures account for different variables, the utilization number represents how much work a particular court had to process in the previous year.

Admin. R. 1(E) requires the judges of the courts of record in each county to develop and implement through a local rule a caseload allocation plan for the county that ensures the even distribution of judicial caseloads among the judges of the courts of record in the county. The judges of the courts of record in each county must approve the county caseload allocation plan by not less than a 75% vote. The chief judge or another judge designated by the courts shall submit the approved county plan to IOJA by the deadline established in the schedule.

The judges of the courts of record in each judicial district (established by Admin. R. 3) may adopt a local rule to develop a district caseload allocation plan that allows for the efficient adjudication of cases within the district. Counties may, by approved local rule, elect to provide that a judicial officer of a court of record within a county or district may serve as acting judge in another court in that county or district. Jurisdiction in the acting judge shall vest only after the Supreme Court enters an Order approving such local rule.

If your current plan has been approved by at least a 75% vote of the judges of the courts of record in the county and you do not want to make any changes to your plan, then you can submit a Request to Re-Adopt your local plan.

However, if you wish to make changes in your plan, you will need to amend your plan. Start with the number of new case filings for the previous year in each of your courts. These figures can be obtained locally by printing out copies of all the QCSRs that you filed or from IOJA. For example, you may find that simply moving all the Level 1 Felonies from one court to another may provide for a more even distribution of workload between the courts within the county. Once the CAP has been developed, a vote must be taken by the judges and the plan must be approved by at least 75% of the judges. The next step is to put it into the form of a local rule.

Local Rules Process

The first step in the local rule phase of the process is to show the changes to the existing plan with strikethroughs and standard rule revision formatting.

Step two is to provide Notice of the proposed rule change. Publication of the Notice is considered complete when the courts send the text of the Notice, and the proposed Local Rule adopting or amending the CAP in a digital format to IOJA and the County Clerk on or before June 1.

The Clerk will post the notice in the clerk's office and on its website if it has one. IOJA will also post the proposed Local CAP Rule on the Indiana Judicial System website for that county. Trial courts are also required to notify the president and secretary of any local county bar associations.

June 1 is the opening day of the 30-day comment period. Each court selects who shall receive public comments for the court. Follow the notice guidelines in Indiana Trial Rule

Between July 1 and 31, the trial courts must approve a final plan. The plan can be identical to the one first submitted or modified based on comments or other information.

By August 1, the trial courts must submit the now locally approved plan to IOJA digitally and in hard copy in a clean format absent of strikethroughs and underlines together with a Request to the Supreme Court to approve the plan.

Between August 1 and October 1, IOJA will review the plans and submit them to the Indiana Supreme Court for approval. IOJA will presume that the plans submitted were properly approved by the county or district. IOJA may request a county or judicial district to explain any caseload variance among the courts resulting from the plan. During this period, the staff of IOJA works assiduously to make sure no plan is in danger of being rejected.

By October 1, the Supreme Court will review the plans and either approve, reject, or return them for revisions.

By November 1, any revised plans are due to the Supreme Court.

By November 15, the Supreme Court will make its final decision on any resubmitted plans.

On January 1, the approved plans become effective. For the trial courts, the CAP process is complete, until 18 months later, when it begins again.

Two caveats: If a county fails to produce a plan, the Supreme Court will require IOJA to draft one for the county. Also, a county can revise its plan outside of the normal schedule. An ad hoc schedule will be developed that follows the same time periods for comment and Supreme Court approval.

Tips and Suggestions

Incorporating the following suggestions when developing a county caseload allocation plan will expedite the approval process.

- Caseload allocation plans must address all recognized case types except for those in which there can be no new filings (CF – Criminal Felony before 1/1/2002, CP – Civil Plenary before 1/1/2002, DR - Domestic Relations 12/31/16 and AH – Adoption History), and Court Business (CB). This is the case even if the county intends to continue historic filing patterns for some or most case types.
- IOJA tracks filings by the case types used in filing Quarterly Case Status Report statistics. If the proposed Plan’s allocation of cases is based upon units that are finer than those recognized case types (for example, if cases within a case type are assigned to a court based upon the charge that is being filed, such as “all cases involving felonies filed under Title 9”), then estimates of the number of such cases that were filed in the preceding year must be provided along with the Plan.
- Be certain to include all additional judicial officers that serve in the county, along with the relative proportion of time that they serve in each court.
- Please note any case types that will be filed in the same manner as under the previous local rules. For example, if the plaintiff’s attorney chooses the court of filing for Civil Plenary (PL) cases, please indicate that filing is discretionary among the appropriate courts.
- Please note any additional factors or situations specific to the county that may not accurately be reflected in the weighted caseload utilizations or county caseload allocation plan, such as drug court or other “problem solving” court programs.
- It may be helpful to consider some of the following concepts and terminology when amending a caseload allocation plan:

Random Filing – Under random filing, each court that has the jurisdiction to hear a specific case type has an equal chance of having such a case filed in that court. The following assumption is made when evaluating caseload allocation plans incorporating random filing: Case types that are randomly filed will be distributed equally among the appropriate courts even though truly random filing is seldom equal.

Filing Ratios – In some cases it may be more suitable to file cases differentially among courts using a pre-determined ratio. For example, a county may decide to file Level 6 Felonies among three courts in a ratio of 2:1:1. In other words, 50% of Level 6 Felonies may be filed in one court and 25% of Level 6 Felonies filed in two additional courts.

Discretionary Filing (civil cases only) – The court of filing is chosen, or selected, by the attorney, or party filing the case. Discretionary filing seldom results in an even distribution of cases between courts and the differential filing of cases between courts often becomes more dramatic over time.

Filing Caps – A predetermined threshold, or filing cap, is set for specific case types. A filing cap works by limiting the number of cases that can be filed in a certain court until the number of filings in the other available courts “catch-up.” Filing caps are an excellent alternative for counties wishing to move away from discretionary filing, but do not wish to remove all discretion from the filing attorney. For example, a county in which three courts can hear Civil Collections (CC) cases can apply a filing cap of 100. CC cases may be filed in any of the three courts until 100 have been filed in one of them. At that point, no new CC cases may be filed in that court until each of the other two courts reach 100 filings. Typically, when filing caps are met in all applicable courts, then the cycle repeats. In the previous example the cycle would start over once the first 300 cases (three courts with a filing cap of 100 each) are filed.
