Why does Howey report that "Medicaid waiver denied"?

MEDICAID WAIVER DENIED, NEW PENCE PLAN

THURSDAY: Gov. Mike Pence is scheduled to announce Thursday a refined proposal to expand the state's Healthy Indiana Plan as an alternative to Medicaid to cover uninsured Hoosiers (Berggoetz, Indianapolis Star). The long-awaited announcement comes after months of negotiations with the federal government over whether it will accept the state's health plan — or a revised version of it — instead of an expansion of Medicaid. Pence's proposal for a waiver, however, has not been approved by the federal government, said Jim Gavin, spokesman for the Indiana Family and Social Services Administration. The approval process includes a 30-day public comment period. Pence will announce details 10 a.m. Thursday at IU Health Methodist Hospital. Then he will speak about it in Fort Wayne at the Women of Bold Empowerment luncheon at noon Thursday, and on Friday in Jeffersonville. He had been negotiating with Health and Human Services Secretary Kathleen Sebelius, who has since resigned, over how the state's plan can be made acceptable to the federal government. But several coverage provisions were less robust than the Medicaid expansion provides. A key sticking point is that the Healthy Indiana Plan requires recipients under the poverty line to contribute the first $1,100 of their care — a provision prohibited by the federal government. The Healthy Indiana Plan is a pilot Medicaid program the state started in 2008 to provide insurance to some Hoosiers who earned too much to qualify for Indiana's traditional Medicaid program — about $4,687 a year for a working mother of two — but not enough to buy private insurance. The approach is modeled on Health Savings Accounts paired with high-deductible insurance plans sold on the private market. Advocates say they encourage people to make more responsible choices about their health care. The proposal Pence will announce Thursday would use private market-based reforms, employer-based plans, and health savings accounts for the Medicaid-eligible population in Indiana, according to a release about the announcement from Chris Crabtree, of Pence's external operations staff.

PENCE WORKING WITH HOSPITALS ON HIP

REIMBURSEMENT: Pence has been working with Indiana hospital leaders to develop ways to fund the costs of the expansion that will be borne by the state—including the significantly higher reimbursement rates that the HIP program pays doctors and hospitals, compared with the Medicaid program (Wall, Indianapolis Business Journal). Any Indiana health insurance expansion that is approved by the Obama administration would be paid for entirely by the federal government in 2015 and 2016, but would then require state contributions that could rise to $393 million per year by 2020, according to estimates by the actuarial firm Milliman Inc. Other elements of Obamacare are estimated to cost the state government $123 million per year by 2020. In March, Pence's staff began talking with Indiana hospital leaders about increasing a hospital assessment fee, which would allow hospitals and the state to qualify for additional federal funding to pay for the state's costs. It is not clear if that idea will be included in the plan Pence announces on Thursday.

PENCE MAKES NYC ROUNDS: Gov. Mike Pence continued to send an array of mixed 2016 signals as the third week of May commenced, jetting off to New York for key appearances before conservatives and potential presidential campaign funders, while announcing a big fundraising event for his reelection campaign back home in Indiana as well as plans to detail an expansion of the Healthy Indiana Plan (Howey Politics Indiana). The New York trip quickly drew criticism from Indiana Democratic Chairman John Zody, who noted the scant public schedule and wondered if Hoosier taxpayers are footing the bill. "Is this an economic development trip, or is it a political trip, and who is paying for it?" Zody asked. "He needs to be transparent with Hoosiers about his plans and who is paying for his trips." But Pence indicated late Tuesday morning he was doing state business, tweeting, "Productive mtg w/a site selection firm that helps clients worldwide find the best location for their biz." Pence made an appearance on "Fox & Friends" Tuesday morning, was scheduled to appear before the Wall Street Journal editorial board and spoke to a meeting of journalists, business leaders and conservative authors Monday night. "This is the second year that Governor Pence has traveled to New York to meet with business executives who are interested in locating or expanding their businesses in Indiana," spokeswoman Kara Brooks said. Asked about his future, Pence said on Fox, "I have to tell you having been elected governor of the state I love, has been the greatest honor of my life. I'm going to stay completely focused on the future of the people of Indiana. I'll stay focused on the people of Indiana and let my future take care of itself." Pence will host a tax conference on June 24 and his reelection campaign has scheduled a fundraiser at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway on May 16.

RITZ, SBOE AT ODDS OVER WHAT WENT WRONG ON

NCLB: State Board of Education members sparred with state Superintendent Glenda Ritz and her staff Tuesday over why Indiana is in hot water with federal education officials (Elliott, Chalkbeat). In a tense meeting reminiscent of last fall's battles between Ritz and the rest of the board over who controlled state education policy, board members peppered the superintendent and her team with questions and challenged the veracity of their answers. Why, they asked, did the U.S. Department of Education give Indiana 60 days to answer a series of concerns or potentially face sanctions? And why didn't board members know sooner that this could happen? "It looks like 100 percent of it is implementation," board member David Freitas said. "I believe the responsibility rests squarely on the superintendent as our leader of the Department of Education." But Ritz insisted her team had not dropped the ball and would meet the requirements of the letter from Deb Delisle, assistant U.S. secretary of education, which said Indiana could lose a waiver that freed it from some potentially costly and cumbersome rules of the federal 2002 No Child Left Behind law. "We all know the urgency and serious nature of exiting this waiver," Ritz said. "The department has done its due diligence and takes full responsibility for making Indiana compliant with the waiver requirements." Delisle's letter said Indiana had "significant issues" complying with its waiver agreement that needed to be corrected before the waiver could be renewed for another year after it expires on June 30... But board members focused on Delisle's complaints that the state was not adequately monitoring and supporting D and F schools as it had promised, demanding that Ritz and the state education department answer for the problems cited...Ritz and her lieutenants, however, said a simple explanation exonerated them: the monitoring complaints were outdated.

$260M IN JEOPARDY OVER STATE'S NLCB WAIVER:

The U.S. Department of Education has made Indiana's waiver from the federal No Child Left Behind law conditional on fixing problems found during a federal monitoring visit last year (Weddle, Indianapolis Star). That jeopardizes the flexibility of using more than $250 million in annual federal funds for Indiana schools... The department has less than 60 days to submit new amendments to the waiver. During that time a series of phone conferences have been set for department staff to confer with federal staff about their progress. "I am very confident in the work of the department and having the waiver extended," Ritz said... Indiana was one of the first states that received an NCLB flexibility waiver in February 2012 under former state Superintendent Tony Bennett. Reforms championed by Bennett, such as the adoption of Common Core academic standards and teacher evaluations, were vital to the waiver approval.

RITZ SAYS PAUSING, DROPPING COMMON CORE LED TO PROBLEMS:

The 2012 agreement with the U.S. Department of Education included a promise that the state would have "college and career ready" standards and tests, an approved school accountability system and an acceptable plan for monitoring and supporting low scoring schools (Elliott, Chalkbeat). Indiana's original plan to meet those requirements, crafted under Ritz's predecessor Tony Bennett, pledged to put into place Common Core standards, Common Core-based tests, a new A to F school grading system and a new statewide teacher evaluation system. But the state soon changed direction in ways Ritz said everyone knew would require changes to its waiver agreement. The Indiana legislature in 2013 paused and then later voided Common Core; the state withdrew from the testing consortium; Ritz radically changed the department's school monitoring operation; and she altered the state model system that most districts used to evaluate teachers. Indiana dropped the Common Core after complaints from critics that following the standards, which 45 state agreed to follow, ceded too much control over what students learn to those outside of the state. Newly created standards were approved last month and state officials are working on a plan to make changes to state tests to match those standards. Given all that, Ritz argued, it should have been no surprise to board members that the waiver agreement would need to be revised.

ELSENER, RITZ SPAR IN TENSE 4-HOUR SBOE

MEETING: Throughout the board meeting, Ritz and board member Dan Elsener had sharp exchanges over whether education department officials, and Ritz herself, were meeting their responsibilities. Several board members shared Elsener's skepticism (Chalkbeat). "I hope they came away with that being unfounded," Ritz said after the meeting. "Because we've been serious about this since my tenure. We know we have implementation to do with the waiver. We have implementation to do with all federal monies. Monitoring and technical assistance is what we do." Elsener was unmoved. He suggested Ritz may have lost focus on the waiver in the fall as she battled with the board, a showdown that culminated in late November when she abruptly adjourned a meeting over the objections of others. "I feel like we left accountability unattended," he said. "I feel like our standards would have been done earlier if the superintendent hadn't walked out of a meeting. That put us two months behind. I want leadership, discipline and a sense of mission." Ritz left today's meeting saying she was just as frustrated with some of what she heard from the board. "We kept asking some of the same questions over and over again that I felt we'd already worked with," she said. "I'm very confident in the work of the department and of having the waiver extended."

PENCE NAMES ATTERHOLT CHIEF OF STAFF: Tuesday, Gov. Mike Pence named Jim Atterholt as his Chief of Staff, effective Monday, May 19 (Howey Politics Indiana). Atterholt has served two terms as a state representative and led two state agencies. He currently chairs the Indiana Utility Regulatory Commission (IURC). "Jim Atterholt's experience in state government and in the Indiana General Assembly, along with his reputation for integrity make him uniquely qualified to serve as my Chief of Staff," said Gov. Pence. "We look forward to having him join our team, and know he will serve the people of Indiana well." Atterholt was appointed by Governor Mitch Daniels to the Indiana Utility Regulatory Commission in June of 2009 and was named chairman in October 5, 2010. He was reappointed in March 2013 for a full term by Governor Pence. Prior to joining the Commission, he was the State Insurance Commissioner for more than four years, where he also served as a member of the Governor's Cabinet. He was elected and served two terms as a member of the Indiana General Assembly from 1998 to 2002. Atterholt also worked as Director of Government Affairs for AT&T-Indiana from 2003 to 2004. "It has been a blessing to observe the positive tone Governor Pence and his team have set for Indiana and their commitment to servant leadership," said Atterholt. "The Governor has a heart for all Hoosiers and a well-deserved reputation for showing kindness to even those who may disagree. I am honored to serve in this new role."

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: Gov. Mike Pence's selection of Jim Atterholt as his chief of staff is a good one. Atterholt is a former two-term legislator, so he knows the process and this will help Pence going into a crucial 2015 biennial budget session in an area where the administration has struggled. Atterholt has a reputation for reaching out across the aisle. He also has executive experience with his stint with the Indiana Utility Regulatory Commission. His pro-life credentials match up well with Pence. - Brian A. Howey

Vice President-elect Governor Mike Pence Remarks at Camp Atterbury

Pence: "The courage of this nation is not found in its hallowed halls or its pillared buildings. The courage of this nation is found in men and women who set aside their lives, their dreams, their own security to preserve that democracy."

Indianapolis – Today, Vice President-elect Governor Mike Pence offered remarks before an audience of veterans and their families at a Veterans Day ceremony at Camp Atterbury in Edinburg, Ind. The following are the Vice President-elect's remarks as delivered.

"The Old Book tells us 'if you owe debts, pay debts. If honor, then honor. If respect, then respect.' And it would be in commemoration of the Great War that came to an end on the eleventh day, the eleventh hour, the eleventh month of 1918 that this day in November became sacred and special.

"In 1954, President Dwight Eisenhower signed a resolution expanding the scope of what had come to be known as Armistice Day. In his words 'in order that a grateful nation might pay appropriate homage to the veterans of all its wars who have contributed so much to the preservation of this nation.' And so was Veterans Day marked and forever enshrined in the hearts of the people of this state and the people of this nation.

"It is on Veterans Day, and Veterans Day in particular, that we pause to honor those who served and came home and the price that each of you paid, that generations of Americans have paid, to preserve our freedom and our way of life.

"We have a day in May where we remember those who served and did not come home. But today is Veterans Day, and it is that one day each year in particular, that we remember all of you. All of you who came home, returned to civilian lives, raised families, built careers, but never really fully left behind those extraordinary days of selfless service. And my hope and my prayer is that today is an encouragement to each of you that in Indiana and all across America, we will never fail to remember the men and women who have served in the Armed Forces of the United States of America.

"I will say, it's humbling for me to be with you today. It's a joy to be home after a fairly busy time in our family's life. But, General Carr, I would be nowhere else than here in my beloved home, and here in this very special place of Camp Atterbury, that particularly since the initiation of hostilities in Operation Enduring Freedom and Operation Iraqi Freedom, both trained and mobilized and demobilized the extraordinary men and women who went forward and fought to preserve our freedom, protect our nation, and advance the cause of freedom in the world. We are proud of Camp Atterbury, General Carr, and we are grateful for your continued leadership in expanding the opportunities here for Indiana's role in national defense.

"I must say, in this day in November and that day in May are very humbling because I am not a soldier. I am the son of a combat veteran who served in Korea. I am also the proud father of a United States Marine. But I've often thought that maybe it's altogether fitting that those of us who have benefited by the selfless and courageous service of men and women who have answered the call of duty in this country are heard from today. Because it is we who owe the debt to you.

"And so on Veterans Day and on that other precious day in the spring, perhaps its altogether fitting to hear from people like me.

"Here in the state of Indiana, which is home to nearly half a million veterans and the fourth-largest Army National Guard in America, Hoosiers scarcely need to be reminded of the debt of honor that we owe to those who have served.

"We pause today to honor the service and sacrifice of our returning veterans. Those that returned with physical scars and challenges. We have in the state of Indiana, as Director Brown just offered, we have dedicated ourselves in renewed ways in the last four years to meet all the needs, the unique needs, of those who have served in uniform, and I'm proud of the people of Indiana the way we've stepped forward for our veterans. And we always will.

"I want to acknowledge the presence, and I'll ask them to stand because when you serve as a Governor, you get a lot of credit. But you couldn't work without the partnership of men and women in both political parties in a General Assembly that have cherished and renewed our state's commitment to our veterans. If Representative Jim Lucas, Senator Greg Walker, Representative Peggy Mayfield, Representative Milo Smith, and Representative Jim Baird. If you all would just stand and turn around and allow – and the Chairman of the Veterans Affairs Committee Representative Randy Frye is here.

"These are all legislators – these are all legislators who have stepped forward and in a very real sense redoubled Indiana's commitment to veterans, and I, on behalf of the state of Indiana, thank you for cherishing and caring for those who step forward to serve our nation.

"It's important to recognize that not all of the challenges that our veterans face upon returning home are physical. The truth is that, in recent years, it's become more apparent to more Americans of the non-physical scars that our veterans bring home. I'm personally grateful to Senator Joe Donnelly, who worked in a bipartisan way to pass legislation this year to ensure that members of our Armed Forces and our veterans have access to counseling to deal with the scars that we do not see.

"I'll never forget, long after my father had passed away, that I was visiting his cousin in Evansville. And he talked about the way his time in Korea in combat had changed my Dad. He said 'your Dad was a happy-go-lucky guy growing up on the streets of Chicago, on the south side of Chicago.' He said 'he went off to war and his smile was different.' Like a lot of combat veterans, my Dad was someone who came home with medals on his chest that promptly went in the drawer and he never talked about it.

"Whenever he talked about heroes, Dad would always talk about the friends that didn't get to come home. When you'd get him to talk about it, he'd marvel how he got to come home and marry this beautiful red-headed Irish girl, raise six precocious kids, and live the American Dream. And I just want you all to know, for those of you that have served, that your fellow countrymen understand that. That there's a burden that you bear, having worn the uniform, having seen what many of you have seen. And we honor your service and we honor that ongoing burden on this Veterans Day.

"Lastly, I know I speak on behalf of all the veterans who are here when I say that those who serve, and have the great joy of having families, know that they do not serve alone. They did long deployments, faraway places, the families, the spouses, the children who stay home and wait, and pray that through their time of service bear just as much of a burden as the one who wears the uniform, and often do not receive the accolades and the encouragement of those who have served in uniform.

"So on behalf of all the veterans here, let me say thank you to the families of those who have served. Thank you for your service to the country. For their service and sacrifice, we owe veterans and their families a debt we can never fully repay. But we can endeavor to do so on days like today – honoring their service, so they hear from us who have the privilege of serving in public life. The voice of the people in this state, and the voice of the people of this nation who will ever be grateful for your willingness at that time in your life to step forward and put our lives ahead of your own.

"But let me also say that we honor their sacrifice and their service by keeping our promises to our veterans. Let me assure you that our new President-elect and his new Vice President-elect are absolutely committed to reforming the Veterans Affairs Health Administration so that we provide our veterans real-time, world-class health care that they have earned and is their right for having served in uniform.

"Change is coming, and help is on the way to our veterans. And I can assure you that, having traveled with our President-elect and heard him speak with our veterans and to our veterans across the country, he is passionate to keep our promises to our veterans. He and I both understand that the benefits that are available to our veterans are not entitlements. They are part of the ongoing compensation to those who served in the uniform of the United States. And we will ensure that those earned benefits are provided.

"It is very humbling to be with you today, it truly is, and not more than a little bit emotional but I am mindful as I sat down of my prior service in Washington D.C., having just got hired on again.

"I would tell you that it would be sixteen years ago when I was looking to serve my hometown just down the road in Washington D.C. On my first trip to our nation's capital, I made my way over to the Iwo Jima Memorial and I'll never forget walking through. I'd read a book about the flag raisers which I'd recommend to anyone here. It's a very human story about those, about those courageous Marines and one Navy corpsman, raising our flag on Mt. Suribachi. But as I walked through the trees, the sun was setting. As I walked through the trees I was struck with an image which would stay with me throughout all my years of service and I'll carry that image to my new office that I visited yesterday in the West Wing, and it simply was as I came through the trees I saw that, the largest bronze statue in the world, depicting those flag raisers at Iwo Jima.

"Then beyond it, in the same line of sight was that fair city – the Lincoln Memorial, the Washington Monument, the United States Capitol, the Whitehouse. I stopped in my tracks. I remember looking out thinking that if I ever have the privilege of serving in that city, that the only picture I would ever have in my office of Washington D.C. would be taken from exactly that spot.

"Because I had concluded that no one should look upon that city without having to look past the heroes that made it possible. So for 12 years in the Congress of the United States and a gift my wife gave me the night I was elected to Congress was a photograph of the Capitol taken from exactly that spot. And I will now take that photograph and hang that photograph in the Office of the Vice President of the United States on January 20.

"This is really what Veterans Day is all about. The courage of this nation is not found in its hallowed halls or its pillared buildings. The courage of this nation is found in men and women who set aside their lives, their dreams, their own security to preserve that democracy.

"And so, today is your day. But just know that your service is enshrined in the hearts of every American and on behalf of the people of Indiana and soon on behalf of the people of the United States of America, I say thank you.

"Thank you for your service. God bless you and your families. As you continue your lives here in the great state of Indiana, just know that your service, your courage and your sacrifice will always be on our hearts and will never fail to inspire. So to all our veterans I say, on behalf of all the people of Indiana, happy Veterans Day."

When Mike Met Donald

Okay, we all know that Mike Pence and Donald Trump, along with their spouses, got together this Saturday at the Trump's National Golf Club in New Jersey to talk about the V.P. spot. And according to media reports, it was described as "warm and friendly" and a chance for the two to get to know each other better. Well, after spending the last 48 hours on the phone trying to sort this all out, here's what TCS has been able to piece together.

Who started this? First of all, TCS' "informed and reliable" sources tell us that it was the Trump campaign that reached out to the Pence folks about possibly running as his Vice-President. There were a couple factors in play. Obviously, Pence's ties to the social conservative movement as well as the fact he is a Governor and has Congressional experience were attractive to Team Trump. But apparently what really got their attention and sealed the deal for Trump to visit with Pence was how Pence endorsed Ted Cruz. Remember the criticism Pence got for what folks considered to be a lukewarm endorsement of Cruz? Well the fact that when Pence did the endorsement, he did not attack or belittle Trump in the process. He was very respectful. TCS is told that really impressed Trump and that's what got the vetting process started. And it was mid week when Team Pence got the invite to come visit. We can pretty much say Pence did nothing to instigate any of this.

So why did Pence go? From TCS has gathered, while Pence is happy to be Governor, he is worried about the direction of the country and he thinks if he has a chance to make a difference, at the very least he should explore the opportunity.

So what did they do when they got there? Well original game plan was for the two to spend the day together getting to know each other better. They were supposed to play a round of golf and the wives were supposed to spend time together as well. And they were all supposed to have dinner that evening. Apparently the weather got in the way of the golf game. Despite that, some of the questions on Pence's mind were what role would Trump expect the Vice President to play in his administration and more importantly, how well would they get along? Remember, Pence is a pretty "stay on message" guy while Trumps is a "shoot from the hip" kind of guy so Pence really wanted to get to know Trump away from the cameras and bombastic personality.

So would Pence take the job if offered? From all our conversations yesterday, the answer is maybe. I know, big shocker. Remember, Pence has always said he was concerned about the direction of the country Indiana needs a partner in Washington. And we know he and Karen have been talking about this ever since the idea first came up. And Karen, TCS is told, has let Mike know that she is very supportive of the idea if that is what he wants to do.

The Cheat Sheet, Vol. 5, Issue 33 – July 2016

What if he runs? If Trump did tap Pence to be his Vice-President, Pence would have to take himself off the ballot because Indiana law does not allow an individual to simultaneously run for President and Governor. He would have to resign from the ballot by July 14 in order for the GOP state committee to pick his replacement. After July 14, Pence could only be replaced on the ballot if he died or moved out of state. And because the GOP convention starts July 17, the timing of all this gets even more tricky. And to make life even more interesting Trump will be here on July 12 for a high dollar fundraiser in Indianapolis. (Prices range from $2,700 to $250,000 a couple)

Are you forgetting anything? And before we forget, if Pence does vacate the spot, there's the question of who runs for Governor? Lt. Governor Eric Holcomb, House Speaker Brian Bosma, State Senator Jim Merritt are all on the short list. And if Holcomb runs for Governor, who runs for Lt. Governor? Three names we're hearing are La Porte Mayor Blair Milo, Evansville Mayor Lloyd Weinecke and Jilleen Long Battle, Chief of Staff for State Treasurer Kelly Mitchell. And just when you thought life couldn't more interesting, here's a fun question to close out this Cheat Sheet, what does all this do to the loyal opposition? Remember, John Gregg and the Democrats have based their whole political playbook on Pence running for re-election. If he doesn't, their whole game plan goes out the window and quite likely, so do their chances of moving into the residence at 46th and Meridian.

The Governor is expected to be back in Indiana today. We're going to try and track him down in the next day or so and see what else we can find out in our LNG capacity. Happy 4th of July!

EDITORIAL: Current, prospective state leaders shamefully absent at E.C. lead crisis
NWI Times

Compassion shouldn't just be on display when it's politically expedient.

And people who profess a desire to lead should step into the fray, even when they have nothing political to gain.

These lessons are apparent right now as we consider how current and prospective Hoosier leaders are — or more accurately are not — responding to the lead crisis in East Chicago.

Some 1,200 East Chicago residents are in the midst of being relocated from the city's public, low-income West Calumet housing complex because of toxic lead and arsenic levels in the soil.

The EPA and city leaders are working to fund the move, a school has been evacuated and deemed unfit for use and people's daily lives — and possibly long-term health — have been put at risk.

Yet you wouldn't know it on the campaign trails for some of the Hoosier state's highest offices.

This woeful showing of compassion for East Chicago is a true bipartisan effort.

Former and prospective future Democratic Sen. Evan Bayh was all too happy earlier this summer to grip and grin for the cameras with Lake County political allies in Hammond.

We even captured a photo of him embracing disgraced East Chicago Mayor Robert Pastrick, the subject of one of the most corrupt political reigns in Region history.

But has Bayh rolled up his sleeves and publicly offered help, compassion or understanding for the residents in crisis in East Chicago? Why hasn't a visit to East Chicago's troubled neighborhood been a part of his campaign itinerary?

We were touched this week to see Indiana Gov. Mike Pence, now the Republican nominee for vice president, visiting, embracing and helping downstate Kokomo residents after horrific tornadoes tore through their community.

Equally powerful were images of Pence and his presidential running mate, Donald Trump, passing out supplies in flood-ravaged Louisiana.

But East Chicago is also part of the Hoosier state, and we're talking about a public health crisis displacing more than 1,000 people and an entire elementary school.

What message does it send when a sitting governor will visit a downstate disaster nearer to his power base but not a Northwest Indiana city experiencing its own major crisis?

We haven't seen Democrat John Gregg visiting East Chicago's crisis zone — or GOP gubernatorial contender and sitting Lt. Gov. Eric Holcomb, either.

Nor have we seen the GOP's U.S. Senate candidate Todd Young, who faces Bayh in November.

Good leaders don't pick and choose their compassionate responses based on political expediency. They respond, in good times and bad, to their entire constituency because it's the right thing to do.

The East Chicago lead crisis has been unfolding for an entire summer. The shameful bipartisan absence of visits by the state's top current and prospective leaders speaks volumes.

Governor Pence,

While the motorcycling community is very excited about the opportunity to work with the Vice President of the United States, ABATE of Indiana has a little business that we'd like to finish with the Governor of Indiana (with your blessing).

At the end of Governor Daniels' administration, I contacted him about an "exit lunch" to show appreciation. He thanked me but said "I'm touched, but I've got everybody and their brother wanting to take me to lunch before I leave." I advised that we were indeed grateful for his efforts, but not to flatter himself, it was the staff we wanted to recognize. He was taken back a bit and replied "Jackson, you guys never cease to amaze me."

So, I know it's all gotten pretty complicated now, between Gov's staff, VP staff, campaign staff and the transition team, but if you feel it is possible and appropriate we would be honored to bring in some pizzas and such to give staff a pat on the back as the Pence administration departs the Governor's Office.

Your thoughts?

Congratulations and thank you for all that you have done for our state, and all that you are about to do for our country.

Ride Safe,
Ride Free,
Jay

We still need to take you for a ride once in a while to clear your head.

Vice President-elect Governor Mike Pence Issues Statement Regarding This Weekend's Winter Weather

Urges Hoosiers to check road conditions before leaving home, avoid unnecessary travel, make way for plow trucks and crews

Indianapolis – The state of Indiana urges motorists to avoid unnecessary travel as freezing rain, snow, and other winter weather continues to affect Hoosiers across the state. As the threat of winter weather continues, Vice President-elect Governor Mike Pence issued the following statement:

"We cannot underestimate the hazards presented by freezing rain and frigid temperatures. I'm thankful to all first responders, including our Indiana State Police, who are working tirelessly to provide assistance to stranded motorists and those involved in collisions across the state," said Vice President-elect Governor Mike Pence. "With temperatures falling and the threat of more freezing rain to come, we recognize the challenges facing the Indiana Department of Transportation as they work to clear roads and prepare for more bad weather. Because we expect more inclement weather in the days to come, I encourage all Hoosiers to check road conditions before leaving their homes, avoid unnecessary travel, and make way for plow trucks and crews on the roads. Hoosiers can be assured that the state of Indiana will continue to monitor weather conditions throughout the weekend and will respond as necessary with all available resources."

INDOT continues to have about 500 yellow salt trucks deployed statewide in areas hit by storms overnight, and continues to assist first responders in clearing state highways ahead of winter operations tonight. INDOT plans to continue salt-truck deployment ahead of falling temperatures and wintry mix moving in this evening.

"The safety of Hoosiers and those traveling our roads is our number one priority, which is why we're urging everyone who doesn't have to be out on the roads to please stay home," said Governor-elect Lt. Governor Eric Holcomb. "This weather is treacherous, and forecasts show more to come tonight and tomorrow. INDOT crews have been out since early this morning, de-icing roads, and State Police are working hard to keep everyone safe including stranded motorists and responding to crashes. Please help us keep Hoosier families safe by staying off the roads."

In response to the winter weather seen in various parts of the state, the Indiana Department of Homeland Security (IDHS) has continued monitoring changing conditions, has staff on stand-by if needed and remains prepared to provide assistance if necessary.

Following the changing weather conditions, the IDHS emergency operations center watch desk heightened its level of readiness, and continues to track weather conditions, particularly in the north-central and south-central parts of Indiana. The watch desk is staffed 24/7. IDHS will continue to keep in touch with counties through their emergency management agencies as the weather continues.

With the forecast of plunging temperatures later tonight, and the possibility of more precipitation, motorists are encouraged to avoid travel unless absolutely necessary. Additional winter preparedness tips for Hoosiers can be found at <http://www.in.gov/dhs/3311.htm>. Road conditions are accessible at <http://indot.carsprogram.org/main.jsf>. Coats Statement on FBI Announcement Regarding Clinton Email Investigation

INDIANAPOLIS – Senator Dan Coats (R-Ind.), a member of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, today issued a statement regarding the announcement by Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) Director James Comey that the agency is not recommending charges against former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton regarding her decision to store and transmit classified information from her personal system:

“While the FBI is not recommending indictment for Secretary Clinton, the agency’s investigation is a harsh indictment of her decision-making and judgment while serving in one of the most important positions in the U.S. government. Whether it was gross negligence or blatant disregard, it is undeniable that Secretary Clinton broke federal law and mishandled classified information, putting American lives at risk and endangering our national security. Handling our nation's most important secrets is a high privilege that should never be taken lightly. The FBI confirmed today that Secretary Clinton put her own personal interests above the national security interests of our country. Secretary Clinton is campaigning for the office of president on the basis of her record, but her disregard for the rules and procedures that guide federal officials undermine the claim that her experience makes her best qualified to lead our country."

Vice President-elect Governor Mike Pence and First Lady Karen Pence Wish Hoosiers a Happy Thanksgiving

Indianapolis – Vice President-elect Governor Mike Pence and First Lady Karen Pence today issued the following statement:

"Thanksgiving is a special time for families across Indiana, ours included. Like you, the Pences will find ourselves seated at the dinner table this Thanksgiving with our hearts grateful for all the blessings bestowed upon us. This last year has brought about new opportunities and some challenges, but through it all, we are most thankful to Him for family, friendship and good health.

"As each of us take time to count our blessings, let us take a moment to give thanks for those who spend time away from hearth and home on Thanksgiving on our behalf. To the men and women of our Armed Forces, who stand post at home and abroad, we remain ever grateful to you and your families for the sacrifices you make. To our law enforcement community and first responders, many of whom will have a late dinner this Thanksgiving as you stand watch over our communities, thank you.

"Thanksgiving is the start of our favorite time of year. The holidays bring families together and serve as a reminder about all that is truly important in life. Yet too many of our neighbors struggle with the burdens of a heavy heart this time of year. A personal struggle or loss of a loved one hits home this time of year, so we would encourage everyone to consider how we might reach out to a neighbor. A warm meal and a kind conversation extended to someone in need is really what Thanksgiving is all about.

"So from our home to yours, we wish you a very Happy Thanksgiving."
