THE PARK STORY

Ouabache State Park tells the story of receding glaciers, historic wildlife, and the people who lived in the area.

Its topography formed 15,000 years ago at the end of the most recent ice age. The receding glaciers left a slightly rolling landscape of debris. Meltwater carved the path of the Wabash River.

The park lies within the homeland of the Myaamia (Miami). The river provided transportation, water, and a food source. They named the river Waapaahšiiki, meaning white river. The park's name is the French fur traders' spelling of that name.

In 1829, European settlers began arriving and building cabins near the river. By the 1840s, settlement was rapid, and land was cleared for farms.

In the mid-1930s, the Civilian Conservation Corps (CCC) and the Work Projects Administration (WPA) began to convert farmland into the Wells County State Forest and Game Preserve. A 1,000-acre game farm was developed to raise wildlife for hunting.

In addition to building the game farm, the CCC constructed the fire tower and the Lodge recreation building; Trails End, Rustic Oak and Campview shelters; a hay storage barn; and the service building. They also planted trees to help fight erosion.

In 1961, the game farm closed and became Ouabache State Recreation Area. In 1983, it became Ouabache State Park.

Today, Ouabache maintains a bison exhibit. This herd allows visitors to observe a mammal that grazed the prairies of northern Indiana until the early 1800s. An asphalt bike trail runs through the park and connects to the River Greenway Trail, which follows the Wabash to the eastern edge of Bluffton. Kunkel Lake offers a swimming beach, boat rental, and fishing.

TRUE TALES

- CREATURE FEATURE: Early records show that herds of bison grazed on northern Indiana's prairies. In the wooded southern regions, bison migrated to salt licks.
- MILITARY FEATURE: After the Civilian Conservation Corps left Ouabache, its camp housed WWII conscientious objectors.
- ICE HARVESTING: Blocks of ice were once cut from Kunkel Lake and stored until summer in layers of sawdust in the property's icehouse.
