Pokagon State Park and Trine State Recreation Area

A world of outdoor fun and activity awaits you at Pokagon State Park and its adjacent property, Trine State Recreation Area. You can fish off the special pier or rent a kayak, paddleboat, or trolling motor powered rowboat. Our single and duplex cabins are air conditioned and have kitchenettes, plus a GREAT view of the lake. Your admission to Trine State Recreation Area also gains you entrance into Pokagon State Park, where many other activities await, such as horseback rides, long trails, swimming beaches, and a nature center. You owe it to yourself to discover Northern Indiana Lakes Country!

Potawatomi Inn is also located inside Pokagon State Park.

Dear Fellow Hoosiers,

Some of your favorite DNR destinations celebrate milestone birthdays this year. Spring Mill State Park and Kankakee Fish & Wildlife Area will be 95 years old. Potawatomi Inn at Pokagon State Park has been housing guests for that same span. Harrison-Crawford State Forest, Lincoln State Park, and Abe Martin Lodge at Brown County State Park turn 90. Shades State Park turns 75; Atterbury Fish & Wildlife Area turns 70; and Portland Arch Nature Preserve and Wolf Cave Nature Preserve at McCormick’s Creek State Park will be 50. And The Fort Golf Course at Fort Harrison State Park turns 25.

The Environmental License Plate, which supports the President Benjamin Harrison Conservation Trust, enters its 30th year of funding purchases of public lands like those listed.

My point of this history lesson is that since Clark State Forest was founded in 1903, we have been here for you. Through good times and challenges, DNR staff have served you while managing and conserving Indiana’s natural and historic resources, and we’ll continue to do that with great hospitality in 2022 and beyond.

Come explore our prairies, wetlands, lakes, woodlands, and geological features and enjoy all the great activities they offer. A great way to start your adventure is by signing up for the Indiana State Nature Passport at VisitIndiana.com/explore. This program provides the chance to “check-in” as you visit state parks, big lakes, fish & wildlife areas, nature preserves, and state forests to earn prizes, the best of which will be the experiences you have and the memories you make with family and friends!

Dan Bortner
DNR DIRECTOR

Dear Fellow Hoosiers,

We look forward to seeing you at the wide variety of Indiana State Park destinations throughout this year. We also have added some fun activities and made some improvements for you to look forward to.

Come check out the variety of nature and history programs we offer. As you do, consider taking on some of the special “challenges” we’ve developed over the last several years. From the Hoosier Quest program, where you can earn and purchase pins for each state park property you visit; to features like the annual Fitness Challenge, which you can do at any state park property; to the 6 Ravine Hiking Challenge at Shades State Park, the 9 Lake Paddling Challenge at Chain O’Lakes State Park, and other similar challenges; we hope you’ll get moving with us this year. You can find details for these and other activities at dnr.IN.gov/healthy and view all event listings at calendar.dnr.IN.gov.

New nature center exhibits have been installed at Pokagon State Park, the marina at Lieber State Recreation Area has been renovated, and we’ve made improvements to Brookville Lake's Hanna Creek Sailboat Marina. We’ve restored the historic stonework near Brown County State Park's upper shelter. A new office with accessible restrooms is under construction at Indiana Dunes State Park. And we’ve done critical infrastructure work on water and sewer lines throughout your favorite places.

Come make new memories with your friends and family or on your own with what’s new at Indiana State Parks in 2022.

See you outdoors!

GOING TO DNR DESTINATIONS FOR THE BIRDS

By Scott Roberts
Birthing, as veteran practitioners call what many know as birdwatching, is something almost anyone can do, and DNR provides the best spots to do it.

Ginger Murphy, deputy director for stewardship for State Parks, an avid birder herself, says it’s easy to get started in the hobby.

“It’s something you can do anywhere, and it doesn’t take a lot to do it,” she said. “A set of binoculars or just your eyes is all you need.”

And birds, of course, and DNR properties have loads of them. The Indiana Birding Trail (IBT) guidebook lists 66 birding destinations spread across the state, and 35 of them are owned and/or managed by DNR.

June Kohler of South Bend has been birthing about 20 years and said she loves learning about each bird species’ different behaviors and because there are so many species, there’s always more to learn.

Lindsay Fairley of Zionsville said birthing has introduced her to the variety of what Indiana’s outdoors offers.

“I’ve learned we have an incredible amount of diversity, and I love seeing our different areas,” she said.

It’s that diversity that makes Indiana a birthing hot spot. More than 400 species of birds can be seen in the Hoosier state due its location. Birds navigate via landscape markers, and we have a huge one, Lake Michigan, which can act as a funnel to draw birds. The lake is a big reason Indiana is part of the Mississippi Flyway, the name given to the route many migratory birds take on their annual journeys.

This guidebook gives you the basic information about DNR locations at which to bird. The IBT, listed at indianabirdingtrail.com provides more in-depth information about what birds can be found, where, and how to find them.

GETTING STARTED

Beginning a birding hobby only takes time and a birding identification guide, DNR ornithologist Allisyn Gillet says. Many guides are available in print and smartphone app form. All you have to do is choose which works best for you. If you are uncomfortable birding for the first time at a DNR destination, your backyard is a good place to start.

The best way to learn bird identification is to start big and work to small. Look at birds’ overall shape and size first, then consider differences in color and color patterns. Once you’re comfortable noting differences in appearance, move onto behaviors—how they walk, fly, and move.

No expensive equipment is needed at this stage. Your eyes, a hat, and a pair of basic binoculars are enough to notice most birds and their differences.

At this point, consider going to birding events. One is the annual Big Sit! at Goose Pond Fish & Wildlife Area. During that event, birders sit all day, identifying and counting birds. Many other DNR destinations participate in the four-day Great Backyard Bird Count in mid-February where birders gather to count and identify birds and report them to the National Audubon Society via the Cornell Lab of Ornithology’s e-bird app. Gillet says these events are great ways to meet and learn from more advanced birders.

“A mentor is a great way to learn the specifics of birding,” she said. “Most birders are eager to transfer their skills to you, and you can learn how they gather information and what they look for.”

Some birds are more prevalent in wetland areas, and others are more prevalent in prairies and drier habitats. Knowing what birds to expect in a given environment can help you identify the birds you see because it narrows the list of species likely to be spotted.

Gillet emphasizes that beginners should not expect to know everything right away. It took her years to become an expert birder, and she learned by making mistakes early. Studying birding guides can be helpful, but many bird species have so many variations that they can’t all be listed. Some birds must be seen in the wild to be identified. When Gillet is birding, she identifies many birds from their song, then verifies them with her eyes. Since many birds have distinct songs, it takes getting out and hearing the differences in them, over and over, to become good at identifying by sound.

GUIDING BIRDERS

For DNR destinations with great birding, check the Facilities Chart on page 5. The fourth column is labeled Wildlife Viewing/Exceptional Birding, with the latter denoted as XB. These are destinations that interpretive naturalists, property managers, and other DNR staff have noticed attract a large number of birds and a variety of bird species.

The IBT guidebook lists birding ethics and approximate birding lengths of time to allow for spotting species at each location, and a more in-depth look at why each place it lists is great for birding. The DNR was heavily involved in assembling the IBT guidebook. Murphy came up with the idea while thinking about ways to promote birding in the Hoosier state and remembered when she had used Texas’ birding trail guidebook several years before.

“I thought ‘gosh, Indiana has great birds, why something similar here?’” she said.

She talked with Brad Bumgardner, who at the time was the interpretive naturalist at Indiana Dunes State Park and is an expert birder. Other projects took priority back then, and they shelved the idea.

In 2018, the pair reconnected after Bumgardner became the first executive director of the Indiana Audubon Society (IAS), and they decided to make the IBT project happen. By the end of 2019, indianabirdingtrail.com was up and running, and printed copies of the guidebook were being sold. Viewing the online version is free.

The committee Bumgardner formed, which included several DNR employees, purposely limited the number of sites listed so guidebook users would not be overwhelmed. The members decided other worthy sites could be added later, if needed.

“We could have had 200 or 300 sites, but by that point you get oversaturation,” Bumgardner said. “We do have a nomination process for new sites, but we will accept only a few a year.”

A combination of factors played into selection into the IBT. IAS used data from Cornell’s e-bird platform, which birders across the country use during the Great Backyard Bird Count to log bird sightings. The platform has been around for 20 years and gave IAS an idea of how many birds of which species were being found at which Indiana sites.

IAS also focused on the accessibility of those locations, which is why the group also took into account basic amenities near those sites, and whether parts of those sites could be accessed by people with disabilities. A smaller boost was given to a location if restaurants or hotels were nearby. Each entry was scored on those factors, and the destinations with the highest scores were the first 60 sites to make the IBT guidebook.

The IBT guidebook was created for two target audiences, Bumgardner says. The first is out-of-state birders, to show them what the state can offer. The second is novice birders, to show them where to start birding and to provide tips on how to get the most out of their birding time.
Gillett, who was part of the committee, says the sites listed include the intended mix of bird diversity and natural beauty.

“When you go birding you really want to enjoy the experience,” she said. “While there is skill involved, there’s also an element of luck, and some days you won’t see anything.

Murphy said diversity of habitat also played a major part in site selection, both geographically and within the locations. If a location had a diversity of habitats within it, it received a higher score.

DNR’s state parks and lakes, fish & wildlife areas (FWAs), state forests, and nature preserves offer such diversity, and each property type offers a nuanced overall experience.

STATE PARKS AND LAKES

State parks are a good option for birders looking for access to numerous amenities while still getting into nature. Most state parks have at least some restrooms open year-round. Seven state parks have inns and restaurants for birders to recharge after a long day in the field. Those parks are Brown County, Clifty Falls, Fort Harrison, McCormick’s Creek, Spring Mill, Turkey Run, and Pokagon.

It's that combination of features and access to nature that prompted the IBT to list 17 state parks. Those destinations are also listed as XBs in this guidebook. Three other state parks are also listed as XBs but are not on the IBT: Whitewater Memorial, Harmonie, and Shades. Whitewater Memorial is a good place to view sandhill crane migration, according to its interpretive naturalist, Kristie Ridgway, and that state park can often be less crowded than other sandhill crane hot spots.

Many bird species are drawn to large bodies of water, which is why birders should consider visiting lakes. Brookville, Mississinewa, Monroe, and Salamonie are listed on both the IBT and as XBs in this guidebook, while Cagles Mill, Hardy, and Patoka are listed as XBs. Many lakes have bald eagle watching events in January and February. Check calendar.dnr.IN.gov for specific destinations, dates, and times of those and other events. If you have mobility challenges, please note that the following state parks have mobility chairs that can be used outdoors: Chain O’Lakes, Charlestown, Fort Harrison, Indiana Dunes, McCormick’s Creek, Mounds, O’Bannon Woods, Pokagon, and Spring Mill.

FISH & WILDLIFE PROPERTIES AND STATE FORESTS

Elizabeth Middleton, conservation partnership coordinator for DNR Fish & Wildlife, says destinations managed by that division provide a different, but potentially just as rewarding, birding experience from state parks.

“There are lot of special opportunities at FWAs for folks comfortable with a few less amenities and a wilder nature experience,” she said.

(Birders photograph waterfowl at Goose Pond FWA’s main-pool viewing area. Each spring and fall, large flocks of migrating sandhill cranes and American white pelicans visit Goose Pond.)

The IBT lists nine Fish & Wildlife properties. This guidebook also includes Deer Creek FWA in Greencastle and Wilbur Wright FWA, near New Castle, as XBs.

While most FWAs, by design, provide a more natural experience than state park properties, Middleton says Fish & Wildlife has been working with the organization Bidadability, which highlights birding locations for people with accessibility challenges, to get birding hot spots Pisgah Marsh and Jasper-Pulaski added to that organization’s map. Pisgah Marsh, which is a wildlife management area, has a wide boardwalk and a parking area with a ramp for people with mobility challenges. Jasper-Pulaski FWA has an observation deck with a lower railing so people who are seated, children in strollers, or people sitting on a bench can get a good view. Jasper-Pulaski is an ultra-popular location to view sandhill crane migration from mid-October to mid-November each year.

State forests are another place to get a birding experience similar to what a Fish & Wildlife property offers. Yellowwood State Forest is listed as an XB in this guide and on is the IBT. Indigo bunting, warblers, and yellow-billed cuckoos can be seen there. Two other state forests, Greene-Sullivan and Salamonie River, are also listed as XBs in this guidebook.

Fish & Wildlife properties and state forests can often be less crowded than state park properties or other well-known birding sites, but they can get busy during heavy migration seasons in spring and fall.

NATURE PRESERVES

Because nature preserves are managed primarily for their ecosystem, many have undisturbed natural areas, which are prime places for birds to inhabit.

Because they typically have fewer amenities than any other of DNR’s destination types, many nature preserves were not listed in the IBT. Indiana’s first nature preserve, Pine Hills, which is adjacent to Shades State Park, is the only DNR nature preserve on the IBT.

Even so, central regional ecologist Andrew Reuter says a few preserves in his area are exceptional birding locations. Big Walnut Nature Preserve in Bainbridge has many migratory songbirds, including cerulean and worm eating warblers and summer tanagers. Portland Arch Nature Preserve contains several species of woodpeckers.

Outside of the central region, Limberlost Swamp Nature Preserve in Jay County is home to bobolink, dickcissel and red-headed woodpeckers.

In northwest Indiana, Moraine Nature Preserve in Porter County is home to a variety of species, thanks to its combination of ponds, wetlands, and upland forest habitats. A study in 1994 found 65 species using the area. During winter, barred and great horned owls can be seen there. During spring and summer, American redstart, warblers, and scarlet tanager frequent the preserve.

Using this guidebook and the IBT as your starting or continuing point will put you on the path to enjoying a Hoosier birding adventure at DNR destinations throughout Indiana.

WHAT’S IN A NAME?

Plenty, it turns out. Use the following descriptions to help choose which type of DNR destination fits you and yours best.

MANAGED BY INDIANA STATE PARKS

Learn more at stateparks.IN.gov.

State Parks (SP): A total of 24 sites were established by the Natural Resources Commission as state parks, generally for their unique natural and/or cultural features. These unique sites conserve portions of Indiana’s natural landscape, often through active resource management and restoration, and provide opportunities to enjoy those resources through developed recreational facilities and services. Each has at least one state-dedicated nature preserve (NP), and some have more. See the Nature Preserves section for more.

Reservoirs (Lakes): Eight sites created for flood control, recreation (both water- and land-based, including hunting), generally by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers (USACE), and leased to DNR. The exception is Hardy Lake, which is State-owned. Some also serve as a water supply for local communities. These big lakes have SRAs (see next column) and wildlife management units where active wildlife habitat management takes place to support a diversity of species for hunting and birding. USACE manages the areas immediately around the dams and regulates water levels throughout the year. J.E. Roush Lake, which was also created by USACE for the purposes listed above, is managed as a Fish & Wildlife area, as described under the Division of Fish & Wildlife section.

Inns and Lodges: Seven facilities within seven respective state parks that provide indoor overnight lodging, restaurants, gift shops, conference/meeting services, and management of the Indiana State Parks online store. These facilities are operated through Indiana State Park Inns, a business embedded within Indiana State Parks.

State Recreation Areas (SRA): Areas within reservoirs, state forests, or other DNR destinations with focused recreational facilities and services such as camping, beaches, boat ramps, picnic areas, trails, etc. Several are managed as a part of the eight reservoirs listed earlier. Two SRAs at state forest destinations (Deam Lake and Starve Hollow) are managed as state park units in communication with the Division of Forestry. State forests are described on the next page.

State Off-Road Riding Areas (SRA): Two sites (Interlake and Redbird) provide motorized and non-motorized off-road riding opportunities. Both also offer picnicking and hiking, and Interlake SRA also offers hunting.

Natural/Historic Areas & Satellite Sites: These are too small to be stand-alone destinations with the diverse recreational facilities most properties offer, and they are not contiguous with the larger property that manages them. They are preserved and protected for their significant natural (two destinations) or cultural resources (three destinations).
Fish & Wildlife Areas (FWA): Indiana boasts 23 Fish & Wildlife areas. Sixteen have offices, are staffed, and are considered the primary FWAs. Their habitats are generally more intensively managed, their hunting opportunities are generally more controlled, and sign-in at each is required. All FWAs are open for a wide array of wildlife-based recreation, including hunting, fishing, trapping, wildlife watching, walking, mushroom hunting, and berry picking. FWAs range in size from 3,000 acres to more than 10,000.

Wildlife Management Areas: WMAs usually comprise several hundred to 2,000 acres. Their habitats and use are generally not as intensively managed as FWAs’. They are also open to a wide array of wildlife-based recreation activities.

Wetland Conservation Areas: WCAs are primarily associated with wetland habitats and are often purchased with revenue from waterfowl stamps. They are usually smaller in size, with the largest covering several hundred acres. Their habitats and use are often managed to control water levels, and sometimes use by people is also controlled.

The Division of Fish & Wildlife also manages three Healthy Rivers INitiative (HRI) conservation areas, 437 public access sites, 30 public fishing areas, and a number of small Game Bird Habitat Areas. For space reasons, none are listed in this guidebook.

STATE FORESTS (SF)
These destinations are managed by the Division of Forestry. For more about each, see on.IN.gov/forestry.

State Forests (SF): State forests offer diverse forest habitat, including dedicated nature preserves. Primitive camping is offered at most, including opportunities for dispersed camping.
at four of them for guests using designated trails. Other recreation opportunities include birding, fishing, hunting, and picnicking. Picnic shelters, horse trails, hiking trails, biking trails, and more are also offered. State forests are working forests. Check with the respective property office or on.IN.gov/forestry for advisories or to learn more.

State Nurseries: For purchasing native tree and shrub seedlings for conservation planting in Indiana. See page 8 for more.

NATURE PRESERVES (NP)

More information is at on.IN.gov/naturepreserves. State-dedicated nature preserves are areas identified as having unusual natural significance, and they hold substantial protection under Indiana law. There are 294 State nature preserves representing 54,569 acres. Their primary purpose is to protect natural areas and the last remaining habitat for Indiana’s rarest plants and animals. Recreation is often limited. Sensitive nature preserves may be closed or restricted to public access, but many others listed on page 4 have trails for hiking. NPs may also be found within State Park and State Forest destinations and Fish & Wildlife areas, which may allow hunting, foraging, and other outdoor activities. Many more nature preserves outside of these larger DNR properties are owned and managed by the Division of Nature Preserves (DNP). At these destinations, foraging and collecting is not permitted. Still more NPs are owned by partner groups and are managed cooperatively with the DNP. For most NPs, expect small parking lots, natural tread trails, and no restrooms, shelters, or other facilities. Always check individual property regulations before you visit.

Conservation Areas: Areas owned and managed by the DNP but not formally dedicated as nature preserves. These areas may not be high quality natural areas but may buffer and connect them.
This is lake country and a small boater’s paradise. Paddle or fish (electric boat motors only) the nine quiet connecting kettle lakes, hike the 29 miles of forested trails, stay overnight in a hillside family cabin, or visit the park’s original one-room schoolhouse or beach nature center. Year-round programming with a full-time interpretive naturalist is available. Other facilities available for visitors to enjoy include a campground, beach and picnic shelters.
