The birth of the Ohio River, the primary feature of the park, began in the Ice Age, when glaciers and periodic natural damming began. This once vast inland sea was shallow enough to walk across in the hot summer months, but in the late 1800s construction started on a series of man-made dams that made the river what it is today. Currently 981 miles long, the Ohio offers many recreational opportunities from catfishing to water skiing. Rugged and winding, the Fourteenmile Creek valley is one of the oldest glaciated stream valleys in Indiana. As a tributary to the Ohio, the creek today appears as a winding “ribbon” lake rather than as a flowing stream. This unique look is due to locks and made dams that the river what it is today.
