recreation building to house the boys ranging from 18 to 28 years old, known as the Civilian Conservation Corps. These CCC enrollees developed the park through tree planting, native stone masonry and wood construction, road construction and path work, watershed and erosion control, and water construction projects. President Franklin Roosevelt's "tree army" also joined artisans in constructing buildings and shelters. Most of their original work is still present throughout much of Versailles State Park.

During fall 1937, Company 596 was pulled from Versailles to work in Oregon. By April 1943, the National Park Service deeded the property to the state of Indiana, and the "Versailles Project" became Versailles State Park, Indiana's second-largest state park. Today the park includes 5,988 acres.

Construction of Versailles Lake began in January 1954. Using prison laborers, the 230-acre lake was built as an area water supply and recreation outlet, opening to the public for boating, fishing and swimming in June 1958. New facilities and features have been added to the park over the years. A swimming pool complex, complete with a waterslide, opened in 1987. As a result swimming in the lake is no longer permitted.

Running directly through the park is Laughery Creek, named after Col. Archibald Lochry, a Revolutionary War soldier. In 1781, Col. Lochry and his men were traveling down the Ohio River to meet with George Rogers Clark at the Falls of the Ohio. Before they arrived, the soldiers died in a battle with Native Americans where Laughery Creek enters the Ohio River, just south of Aurora.

An abundance of history lies below the park's surface. Over time Laughery Creek has cut its way through Silurian over limestone, creating rugged cliffs and exposing fossil-rich, 475-million-year-old Ordovician rock. Throughout many of the park's creeks, hikers will find fossils, including bryozoans, brachiopods, corals and crinoids. Numerous sinkholes and associated springs point to an extensive underground drainage system that dominates the park.

The park's beautiful hardwood forests provide expansive habitats for songbirds and a variety of wildlife. To learn more about Versailles State Park and the opportunities that the park provides, visit the Nature Center located near the lake. Its interactive exhibits provide educational and recreational.

As the sun tucks away behind the picture-perfect backdrop of red, blue and purple clouds, the loud squawk of a great blue heron breaks the silence as it glides effortlessly over Versailles Lake. Anglers cast glowing bobbers to prepare for a night of catfish excitement as a family of raccoons eagerly searches the banks of Laughery Creek for crawdads.

Another family lights its campfire near the tent to enjoy a night of marshmallows and ghost tales narrated by distant owls.

This is just another day in the making at historic and rural Versailles State Park.

In August 1934, during the Great Depression, the National Park Service announced plans to develop a federal park on 1,700 acres of marginal Ripley County farmland. By fall, land was secured for the Versailles Recreation Demonstration Area, the first federal park in Indiana. The following January, more than 200 young men known as Company 596 arrived to begin work. The first focus was constructing 15 barracks, a mess hall, an administration building and a
