Metal Inert Gas (MIG) Welding Course

Tamara sums up her training story in four words. “Welding changed my life,” she said with excitement. “When I first started welding school at Knight School of Welding, I didn’t know anything about welding. I wasn’t sure if I was going to be able to stick it out and finish, because every day was a new challenge for me.”

She didn’t quit when faced with adversity. She stuck with it and completed the program. “Honestly, that was the best choice I have ever made,” Tamara said. “Knight school of Welding taught me the skills to become a successful welder.”

Tamara said the welding school was able to connect her with employers and companies along the way so she would have her first job lined up as soon as she completed the program. She also remembers that one instructor told her one of the first things she would do when she got to work is that she would make mistakes. “It was so true, I had made mistakes, but those were good mistakes that helped me to better my craft every project I’m assigned,” she said. “Welding opened opportunities for me that I would never have thought of. I have met so many people along my journey and, most importantly, I have found my career in life.”
