DIRECTOR’S REPORT
Jim Corridan’s written report was furnished with the packet.

Jim Corridan reported:
Things continue to progress at the Archives.
2 contracts have been approved that are of some significance. One is our Virtual Volunteer program through a company called From the Page, a crowdsourcing program, that will allow people from anywhere in the world with access to the internet to go online, see our digital content that hasn’t been indexed yet, log in, index the items that will then get loaded up into the Cloud and be accessible to the public. That was approved yesterday, so this is cutting edge new.
The other one that’s coming is our Social Media Archiving. That contract will allow the archives to store social media accounts across the government. It also has a couple of other features – a public interface, so that people can search for historic (2 years ago, not a hundred years ago) items that were put up before. There is also what they’re calling a risk management component, so that if something is posted from your agency and you’re the person who’s responsible for that from your agency, and it suddenly goes viral, it will notify you. If someone posts let’s say on Twitter derogatory swear words, something inappropriate, it will flag the customer, whoever’s in charge from your agency, so they can deal with that issue. And then the final component of it is there is a way for the program to be used to do public records searches by the agencies, where they can search for a term, like “Mike Pence” or something, and every time those things come up it will pull those particular social media accounts and the content right around them so there’s context. So, it’s a great feature it’s being run as an enterprise wide situation where the Archives is paying for it. We’ve currently counted 159 social media accounts, we have 150 that we can use. Some of them are sub-accounts under other agencies, so we aren’t looking at taking INDOT and then each of the 7 or 9 INDOT regions. By account that’s like, the Governor’s Office Twitter account is an account, the Governor’s Office Facebook account is a second one, Instagram is another. So that’s how we count to 150. I don’t think it’s going to be compulsory, but at some point this will get written down probably this summer.

Jim Corridan reported he gave his notice to the Governor that effective June 1, 2018 he will be leaving. He is looking forward to unwinding and becoming a normal person again. Luke Britt stated they certainly appreciate his service.
