What is Indiana Grown?

Indiana Grown is the local agriculture branding initiative for the state of Indiana. Housed within the Indiana State Department of Agriculture, Indiana Grown elevates and promotes all forms of agriculture packaged, raised, processed and grown in Indiana. From fifth-generation hog farmers to roasted coffee, and from urban farmers to salsa, the agricultural landscape in the Hoosier state is diverse, and Indiana Grown celebrates this every day.

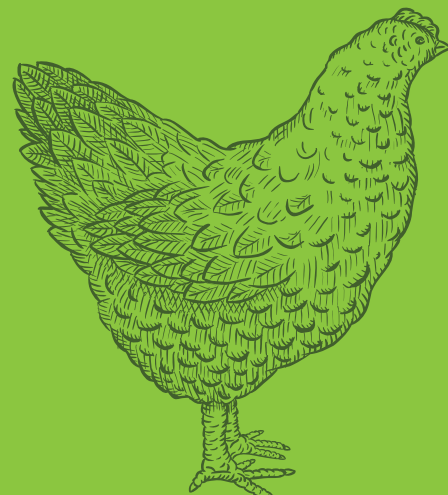

Why Buy/ Source Indiana Grown Products?

Right now, you can go to almost any grocery store in Indiana and find products packaged, raised, processed or grown in Indiana. Those purchases support Indiana farms. When you visit a farmers market and buy directly from a farmer or producer, you are supporting Indiana farms. When you look for familiar names on the menu of your favorite restaurant or choose an item in the cafeteria that comes from a local grower, your choices support Indiana farms. Look for the Indiana Grown logo, visit our website to find farms in your area or use this guide to better inform your choices.

How to Use this Guide.

Indiana Grown strives to connect farmers and producers with consumers by promoting all forms of agriculture. With over 15 million acres of farms across the state, you will find some of the highest quality products in North America. The demand for locally sourced goods is at an all-time high, and this demand is propelling Indiana Grown forward each day. Whether you're buying for yourself, your family or for a restaurant or school system, one or more producers in this book can help you build the perfect menu.

PRODUCERS:

Beer, Wine, Spirits, Cider, Mead

SPIRITS ARE A NATURAL BLEND of Indiana-grown goodness.

Corn and barley harvested from rolling farm fields fermenting for a smooth shot of whiskey. Fresh honey and perfectly ripened fruit creating a delectable glass of mead. Hops in full flower offering aroma and flavor to a refreshing red ale. From tailgates to fine dining, there's a perfect Indiana-produced beverage ready to please your palate.

DEEPER LOOK:

Indiana Grown Member Wine Trail

AT LAST COUNT, more than 115 wineries in Indiana accounted for over 700 acres of grapes planted each year in the state. You can find Indiana wines at your favorite local grocery or beverage shop and at many local restaurants.

The best way to experience Indiana wines for yourself is to visit one. With wineries all over the state, you can travel near or far to sip, sample and shop from the different growing regions. The Indiana Grown Member Wine Trail is a great way to be a viticultural tourist in our own state.

From Fremont to the north to Cayuga in the west to Richmond in the east and Corydon in the south, you can travel the entire state in pursuit of the finest varietals our Hoosier state has to offer.

When you savor a first sip of wine produced in Indiana, you may not realize you're experiencing a taste of history both recent and ancient.

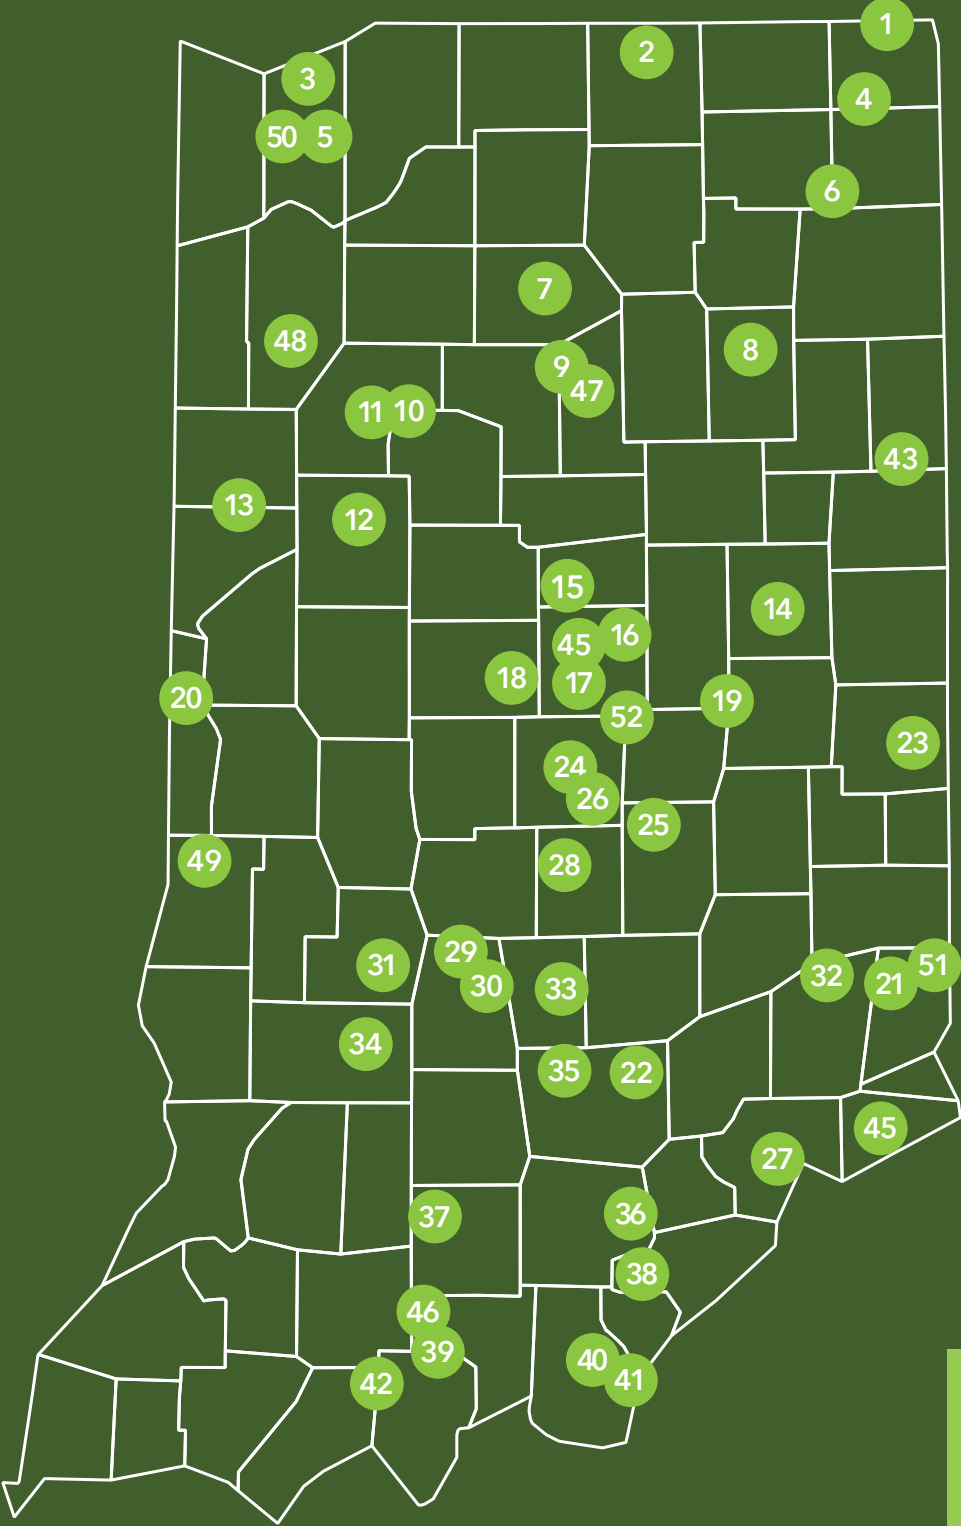

Southeast Indiana is recognized as the original home of the American wine industry, with the country's first successful winery established in Switzerland County in the early 1800s.

Why southeast Indiana? That's where the ancient history comes in. When the most recent Ice Age ended around 16,000 years ago, its glaciers stopped before reaching what is now southern Indiana. But the floods from the meltoff helped carve the hills and river valleys so prevalent in the region.

While such uneven terrain is not friendly to typical Indiana farm crops, it gave prospective vintners the ideal growing conditions for their grapes. And now, over two centuries later, Hoosier wine lovers are still enjoying the result of this intersection between history and geography.

PRODUCERS:

Proteins, Livestock & Eggs

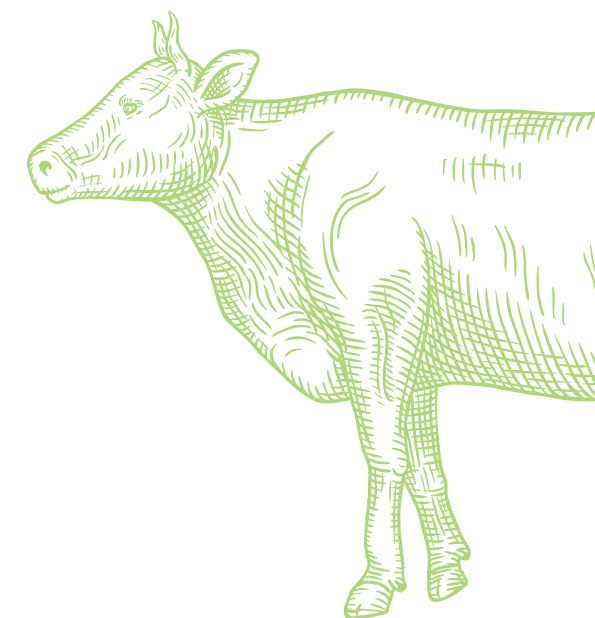

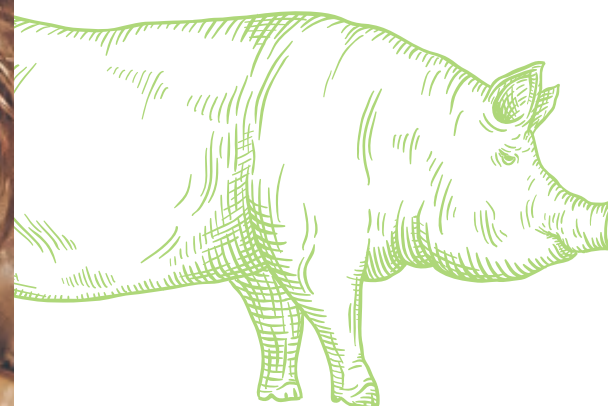

CENTERPIECE TO YOUR MENU. Essential for good health.

And a mouth-watering option with endless methods of preparation.

From duck to pork, beef to fish and seafood, delicious and nutritious

Indiana-grown proteins and eggs come in all flavors and forms.

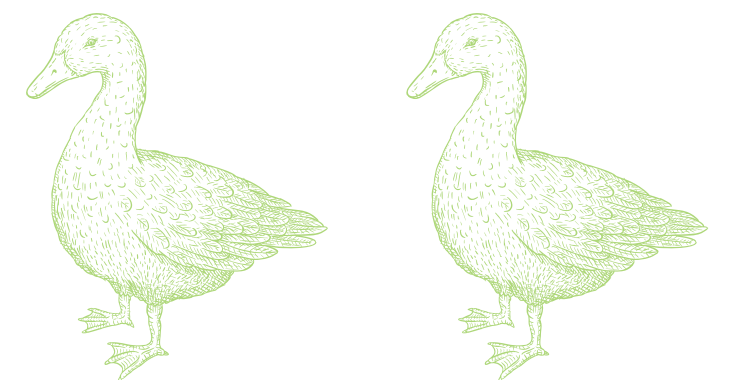

DEEPER LOOK: Proteins

WHILE INDIANA PROTEIN PRODUCERS devote countless hours and endless resources to their pursuit of developing the best possible products for Hoosier consumers, they all possess a key and wide-ranging benefit regional and national competitors can't match: proximity. Local proteins – beef, pork, chicken and other options – are more accessible to consumers than ever before. That shorter route from farm to table for everything from burgers to pork chops has multiple impacts:

- Buying local proteins financially supports the producer as well as every other vendor the producer uses.
- Multi-generational farms continue to grow, deepening and expanding their roots.
- Buyers have the comfort and confidence of knowing where their food comes from.

For proteins that support local growers and their farms, choose Indiana Grown for your next meal or menu.

PRODUCERS:

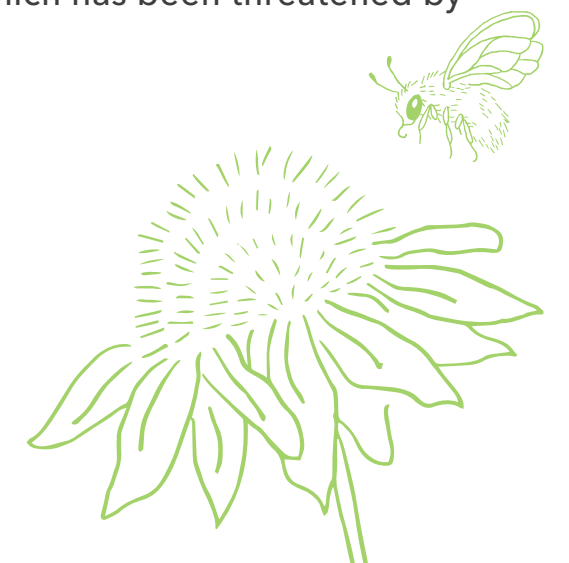

Natural Sugars

IT'S EASY TO LOOK AT NATURAL SUGARS like honey as decadent indulgences, a reward after a long workout or something reserved for your diet's cheat day. But let's take a second look at honey and its positive effects on your health (not to mention the local economy).

Honey has been proven to have many positive effects:

- Improved heart health
- Better wound healing
- Higher antioxidant value in the bloodstream, shown to reduce the risk of strokes and some types of cancer
- A bounty of key nutrients such as niacin, riboflavin, pantothenic acid, calcium, copper, iron, magnesium, manganese, phosphorous, potassium and zinc.

Beekeeping also keeps local plants and orchards healthy through pollination while also preserving the bee population, which has been threatened by multiple environmental factors.

DEEPER LOOK:

Natural Sugars

OUR IDEA OF TRADITIONAL SYRUP PRODUCTION

is probably nothing like today's methods used by Hoosier producers here at the tip of the "Maple Syrup Belt."

While we typically envision a snowy grove of maple trees with steel buckets hanging from taps, today's approach is much more efficient – and friendlier to the trees, causing far less damage and leaving them healthier.

Many producers use a network of taps and tubes leading to a main syrup "pipeline," which then feeds to a capture tank. From there, the sap – which is surprisingly fluid at this point – has the water boiled out to get to the sweet syrup we know so well.

While the process is fairly simple, it relies on a far less predictable element: weather. Sap is very finicky, preferring a tight, 20° Fahrenheit temperature range to flow freely. Tapping typically starts in January or February and stops when temps rise above 55°F.

Chances are there's fresh, locally produced syrup near you. Currently, 50 counties in Indiana have at least one syrup producer.

PRODUCERS:

Produce & Specialty Crops

THIS VERY LAND WE WALK ON makes us Hoosiers. And from its natural richness sprouts a cornucopia of healthy and appetizing fare. From tomatoes on the vine to sweet corn in a row, our Indiana soil nurtures endless varieties ready to travel from the farm to your table.

DEEPER LOOK:

Produce & Specialty Crops

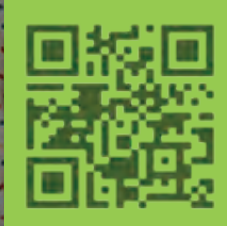

AT EVERY STEP OF THE PROCESS, Indiana-grown produce and specialty crops connect Hoosiers.

- On farms, growers work with neighboring producers and partners to educate themselves on modern food safety practices and the best ways to promote their agribusinesses.
- At farmers markets, local buyers can look growers in the eye to learn where and how the produce was grown and how best to prepare it.
- In orchards, families join together to pick their own produce straight off the tree, the kids resisting the urge for their own secret taste test.
- At pitch-in dinners, neighbors gather to share their favorites dishes, a delicious bounty prepared with self-curated local ingredients.
- On a weekend trip, friends visit a local U-Pick farm for the best in-season berries.

From the flat farm fields of northern Indiana to the rich, rolling soil in the south, Indiana-grown fruits and vegetables bring people together.

FARMERS MARKETS:

There are nearly 200 farmers markets
in Indiana, and the list is ever growing.

For the most up-to-date farmers market map and listing, please scan this QR code.

FARMERS MARKETS are an important part of a regional food system and many Indiana Grown members grow their businesses each week at their local farmers markets. This is a great way for you to get the freshest vegetables and fruits. “Farm to Table” is not so new after all. Hoosiers have been giving you the best Indiana agriculture has to offer since this great state was formed.

Indiana Grown also works to build the local agriculture community through community partnerships like:

- The Indiana Grown for Schools Network
- The Indiana Farmers Market Community of Practice
- Connecting producers with retail, wholesale and institutional buyers
- Creating high value, high impact projects and events to connect Hoosiers to Indiana farmers and artisans

PRODUCERS:

Horticulture & Hardwoods

FOR MANY OF INDIANA'S HORTICULTURALISTS, the growing season is extended through the use of high tunnel and hoop house growing practices. Seeds are sown long before the last signs of frost and carefully transplanted into the pots we later buy and enjoy throughout the spring and summer at our own homes and businesses. You can find Indiana trees and plants for sale at locally owned greenhouses as well as from larger names you know on a larger scale. Indiana stands out in this area, from bedding plants to holiday trees. The DIY gardener can get the veggies and herb plants they need, all truly Indiana grown and able to thrive under our growing conditions. That first bite of a summer tomato reminds us about what we love about this season and the fruit of the soil.
