Commissioner David Hadley to leave IURC

Commissioner David Hadley has resigned from the Indiana Utility Regulatory Commission and will be leaving State Government. Hadley was first appointed in 2000 and served Governors Frank O'Bannon, Joe Kernan and Mitch Daniels.

"The combination of skills and talents David has brought to the Commission will be difficult to replace," said Commission Chairman, David Lott Hardy. "David Hadley has been an exceptional public servant."

During Hadley's tenure at the Commission he helped promote Clean Coal Technology and the economic development and jobs that the emerging technology brings to all Hoosiers. He championed demand side management programs that allow customers to better control their electric bills and supported programs that protect low-income families during the winter heating months.

"This job has been extremely satisfying and rewarding," said Hadley. "It has been an honor to have the opportunity to serve Indiana not only at the state level but also nationally and internationally."

Prior to joining the Commission, Hadley served as an executive officer of the AFL-CIO. He served as a business development specialist with the Indiana Department of Workforce Development. Hadley worked as a union coal miner and served as a legislative affairs representative for the United Mine Workers of America, and is a former high school social studies teacher.
