

Making Your Voice Heard Speaking Out on Pending Cases

Cases before the Indiana Utility Regulatory Commission (IURC) are similar to civil court cases. The IURC is a 5-member body required by law to make decisions ensuring safe and reliable utility service at just and reasonable rates. It bases its decisions on evidence filed by the utility, the Indiana Office of Utility Consumer Counselor (OUCC), and additional parties that may intervene.

The OUCC is a separate state agency representing consumer interests in these cases. In addition to filing written testimony and exhibits based on its legal and technical reviews, the OUCC invites written consumer comments in all cases.

Written Consumer Comments

Comments are Important

The OUCC consumer services staff reviews every comment the agency receives, then directs the comment to the OUCC team assigned to the case.

Each case team includes attorneys, engineers, and accountants who are using their expertise to analyze the utility's request and develop a position on behalf of consumer interests.

The OUCC must file expert testimony by specific deadlines in each case. Consumer comments received at least one week before the deadline will be included in the OUCC's filing for the official case record.

Consumer comments do not need to be technical in nature but should focus on the issues relevant to the specific case. Most importantly, your comments can and should reflect your personal experience as a customer. They may also include any professional knowledge and/or observations you wish to share.

Public Field Hearings

State law requires the IURC to hold public field hearings in some cases but not all. Public field hearings allow consumers to provide sworn, oral comments to Commissioners in person and on the record.

Public field hearings do not include presentations from utilities or question-and-answer sessions.

In an IURC case, the utility presents its request and evidence in writing.

Commissioners render a final decision after considering the evidence in the case record, including comments presented at field hearings (when held) and comments and testimony filed by the OUCC.
