The Affordable Connectivity Program is an FCC benefit program that helps ensure that households can afford the broadband they need for work, school, healthcare and more. The benefit provides a discount of up to $30 per month toward internet service for eligible households and up to $75 per month for households on qualifying Tribal lands. Eligible households can also receive a one-time discount of up to $100 to purchase a laptop, desktop computer, or tablet from participating providers if they contribute more than $10 and less than $50 toward the purchase price.

The Affordable Connectivity Program is limited to one monthly service discount and one device discount per household.

Who Is Eligible for the Affordable Connectivity Program?

There are four ways your household can qualify for ACP: Based on household income; if your child participates in certain government assistance programs such as SNAP, Medicaid, WIC, or other programs; if you or your child or dependent already receives a Lifeline benefit, or you may qualify for the ACP through a participating internet provider's existing low-income program.
