Moment in Hoosier History: The Sisters of St. Benedict came to Ferdinand, Indiana in 1867 to fill a need for German speaking teachers and make a difference in the lives of local settlers. In 1870, the sisters opened Academy Immaculate Conception (later renamed Marian Heights Academy), a boarding school for girls. In addition to educating thousands of girls at the academy over the years, they have taught in more than 75 schools in 12 states and five countries. Currently, Indiana’s Ferdinand Benedictines are one of the largest Benedictine communities of women in the United States. The Sisters of St. Benedict’s commitment to both the local and global community spans nearly 150 years. In that time, they have led the way for women educators, served in groundbreaking positions of thoughtful and dedicated leadership and continue to live by example. I am immensely proud to share my hometown with such an accomplished group of women who I look to for guidance and inspiration but also have the privilege to call my friends.

Moment in Hoosier History: As Indiana’s Chief Elections Officer, one of the most pivotal moments in U.S. history for me was the 19th Amendment, which gave all American women the right to vote. Here in the Hoosier state, women joined together to form the Woman’s Franchise League of Indiana, which became the driving force for the right to vote. In an effort to raise awareness and gain momentum in the fight for equality, the group held rallies, marches, participated in parades and lobbied the government. Over a 20-year period in Indiana, no fewer than 10 suffrage bills were unsuccessfully submitted to the Indiana General Assembly for passage and some were not even considered. It wasn’t until January of 1920 that Indiana became the 26th state to grant women universal suffrage by ratifying the 19th Amendment that the U.S. Congress had just passed, but that wasn’t enough to amend the United States Constitution. In order to amend the Constitution, 10 more states needed to ratify the amendment, which occurred on August 26, 1920. Over the years, the stories of those who organized, petitioned and picketed to win the right to vote have faded into the history books, but their tireless struggles and relentless efforts have not been forgotten.

Moment in Hoosier History: Female authors have contributed some of the best essays, poems, short stories and novels ever written to both Indiana and U.S. literature, but it was difficult at first for women to receive recognition for their work. Many times they wrote anonymously or under a masculine pen name in order for their work to be accepted. It wasn’t until the mid-1800s following the women’s suffrage movement that women finally began receiving credit as influential authors on a large scale, leading to a new school of thought and some truly great literary works. Authors such as Virginia Woolf, Harriet Beecher Stowe, Charlotte Bronte, Mary Shelley, Jane Austen, Ayn Rand, Louisa May Alcott, Harper Lee, Laura Ingalls Wilder and Gene Stratton Porter (an Indiana author) pushed the boundaries of traditional writing styles and themes to inspire generations. These women opened the door for conversations about inequalities, stereotypes and injustices while encouraging readers to embrace nontraditional prose and enjoy stories full of adventure, fantasy and heroism. The women’s suffrage movement changed the landscape for women on many fronts, but to me the opportunity to openly publish literary works and gain praise, criticism and credit is one of the most important.

Moment in Hoosier History: Grace Urbahns, from Porter County, served as the 33rd Treasurer of State in Indiana, from January 1926 to February 1931. Grace was appointed in 1926 to fill out her late husband’s (Bernhardt Urbahn) unfinished term when he unexpectedly passed away. Grace went on to be elected to two further terms (at the time, the Treasurer of State’s term was two years rather than the current four years). This was a remarkable accomplishment, coming only six years after women were granted the right to vote and to run for office. She was the first female elected statewide official in Indiana, and one of the first in the country. Grace was very active in the Republican Party, serving as National Committeewoman from Indiana and instilling a love of public service in her family. Her nephew, James Givens, went on to also serve Indiana as the Treasurer of State from 1941 until 1945.

Superintendent of Public Instruction Glenda Ritz

Moment in Hoosier History: The Indiana Constitution of 1851 guarantees an education system that is “equally open to all.” As a young woman in Indiana, I had many opportunities to learn and be successful, and I attribute this to the excellent education I received in the Indiana public school system. As I travel around the state, I am constantly inspired by the young people I see working hard and taking advantage of all that our great schools have to offer. As Superintendent, it is my greatest honor to uphold the Indiana Constitution and to ensure that Indiana schools continue to be equally open to all.
