State Fair is packed with free concerts, fun shows

There's never been a better time to enjoy the Indiana State Fair – Hoosiers' annual end-of-summer celebration. This year's 156th edition, Aug. 3-19, has an incredible amount of free concerts, Hoosier Lottery Grandstand events and free family shows to go along with all the livestock exhibits and delicious foods.

It's the "Year of Dairy Cows" presented by the American Dairy Association and there will be many dairy-related activities and exhibits. Cowtown USA in the Family Fun Park will give visitors the chance to hand-milk a real cow, participate in the pasteurization process and help make tasty dairy products to sample afterward. The Dairy Bar on Main Street has added a new "Moo-Chew" meal consisting of a sourdough grilled cheese sandwich loaded with American and pepper jack cheese along with a refreshing lemon chiller milkshake – yum! Also, the Mac Reynolds Barn will house exhibits featuring fun facts about dairy cows, cow-themed games and photo opportunities.

The State Fair headline concert series has a great line-up that includes Barry Manilow (Aug. 3), Train (Aug. 4), Journey (Aug. 8) and Blake Shelton (Aug. 17). These shows will be at Bankers Life Fieldhouse, only about 10 minutes away from the fairgrounds. The Free Stage features a variety of exciting concerts, including REO Speedwagon (Aug. 6) and

AUGUST 3-19, 2012

MC Hammer (Aug. 13). Celebrity hypnotist Catherine Hickland puts audience members into a trance Aug. 15-17, and Food Network star Bobby Deen whip ups delicious dishes on Aug. 10.

The Hoosier Lottery Grandstand is packed with events every day of the fair. The best high school marching bands in the state perform during Marsh Band Day Aug. 3, with preliminaries beginning at 9 a.m. and finals at 8 p.m. For race fans, the Lucas Oil Indy Mile AMA Grand National motorcycle race begins at 3 p.m. Aug. 18. Other great events at the Grandstand include the International Circus Hall of Fame (Aug. 6-7), Timberworks Lumberjack Show (Aug. 8-9), Xtreme Action Sports Show presented by Voice (Aug. 10) and the Great American Wild West Show (Aug. 12-13).

If all that great entertainment doesn't get you "MOO-ving" to the fair, maybe this will. The new DuPont Food Pavilion at the end of Main Street is packed with native Indiana foods, cooking demonstrations and a marketplace for folks who want to take their favorite Indiana foods home. Fairgoers can learn how to make healthy food choices and find out how to help feed the hungry. Indiana commodity groups and food manufacturers offer samples throughout the entire run of the fair in this 16,000 square foot exhibit funded in part through the LDI 100th Anniversary Celebration Cultural Partnership Gift Program.

Maybe the best news about this year's Great Indiana State Fair is that visitors still have a variety of opportunities to

Bone marrow donations are needed to save lives

During the blood drive on July 18, volunteers from Be The Match Registry came to register possible bone marrow donors. A record number of donors turned out for the event. More than 75 donors registered for bone marrow donation and 186 units of blood donations were collected.

According to Be The Match, an organization that helps match marrow donors to recipients, and encourage others to volunteer, more than 10,000 U.S. patients every year are diagnosed with life-threatening diseases such as leukemia or lymphoma. When you help grow the registry, your efforts can help save the life of any patient in need of a bone marrow transplant.

Indiana Public Retirement System (INPRS) employee Joyce Genneken shares her son's story and the importance of bone marrow donation:

was like any 11 year old boy. He loved being outside, playing with his friends and his dogs, and saw each day as the blessing it truly is, until he was diagnosed with Leukemia. Leukemia is a blood cancer that strikes an estimated 4,000 children under the age of 14 and more than 40,000 adults annually. Leukemia is considered a curable disease, yet within five years, 50% of those diagnosed succumb to the disease or complications resulting from treatment.

Tyler was winning his battle with cancer for nearly three years; but then due a relapse, it was necessary for him to have a stem cell/bone marrow transplant to survive. Unfortunately, a match could not be found and at age 14 Tyler joined the approximately 2,000 children who pass away from leukemia annually in the US.

Before Tyler's journey ended, he made it clear that no child or parent should have to face the harsh reality he did when a cure is available. Due to the small number of people on the National Marrow Donor Registry, a match could not be found, and as a result, he did not survive."

Joining the National Marrow Donor Registry (Be The Match) is simple and takes only a few minutes. Giving your marrow or stems is painless, and takes only a few hours of your time. By doing so, you may give a cancer patient – a child, a mother, another chance at life. Join Be The Match today – children just like Tyler is waiting on you to be their hero.

Joining the registry is easy. If you are between the ages of 18 and 60, meet the health guidelines and are willing to donate to any patient in need, you are welcome to join the registry. When you come to a donor registry drive, volunteers will explain what it means to join the registry, help you understand your commitment, answer your questions and help you through the process.

Be The Match Registry has grown to more than 10 million donors and nearly 165,000 umbilical cord blood units, the largest and most racially and ethnically diverse registry of its kind in the world. You can make the difference.

National Farmers Market Week Aug 5-11

This year, August 5 to 11 is National Farmers Market week. Thousands of farmers markets across the America offer consumers affordable, convenient and healthful products sold directly from the farm in their freshest possible state. This increases consumer access to fresh fruits and vegetables, promoting family health and potentially reducing childhood obesity. Farmers markets also play a key role in developing local and regional food systems that support the sustainability of family farms, revitalize communities and provide opportunities for farmers and consumers to interact. The growth in number of markets might be “remarkable,” but farmers markets still account for only a tiny percentage of the food that is purchased in the US--less than 1%, according to USDA.

In 2011, USDA unveiled the 2011 National Farmers Market Directory, which shows that the number of markets in America rose from 6,132 in 2010 to 7,175. Indiana is ranked 5th with farmers market numbers growth, jumping up 37% to 171 total markets. California has the most markets with 729.

“Our country has been losing more than an acre of farmland every minute, and that irreplaceable land is disappearing most rapidly in areas where our fruits and vegetables are grown,” said American Farmland Trust President Jon Scholl. “Farmers markets help curb this problem by strengthening family farms.”

Despite the drought, many farmers markets are doing better than expected. The Terre Haute Farmers Market organizers say the heat took a toll on all crops this summer, but the market still had an outstanding turn out.

“A lot of the growers will tell you that they’ve lost a lot of their planting simply because it didn’t germinate because there wasn’t enough moisture in the ground. On the other hand, many of these vendors are watering their crops and so we really do have the full range of produce,” said Chris Gambill with the Terre Haute Farmers Market.

Lafayette market manager Kim Murray said about five vendors at her market have pulled out altogether. The market will continue and Murray said guests should make a point to come early.

“Each vendor is experiencing something a little bit different,” Murray said. “If you have your mind set on something, it’s best to come down first thing in the morning to get the product you want.”

The Statehouse market, in downtown Indianapolis, opened on July 12, and has seen a success, despite the drought. The market has eight vendors who bring a variety of products including from vegetables, fruits, cheese, honey and meat.

“We are struggling a bit because of the drought; but we have received some rain so my later crops should come through,” said Dave Sturgill of VanAntwerp Farms.

Quake Cottage shakes up Government Center

The Indiana Geological Survey has purchased an earthquake simulator, called the Quake Cottage, which can produce the shaking equivalent of a 5.5 to 8.0 seismic event. The completely portable simulator is 22 feet long, 8 feet wide and 14 feet high and is mounted on a dual-axle trailer.

It is equipped with earthquake grade tools to keep furniture in place during the event of an earthquake and to alert if abnormal movements are sensed.

A two-year grant funded by the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) through the Indiana Department of Homeland Security made the simulator possible.

On Monday June 11, around 100 state employees experienced the Quake Cottage on the Indiana government center campus.

“The simulator provides Hoosiers with an opportunity to experience shaking similar to that of a moderate to strong earthquake,” said Walt Gray, education outreach coordinator for the Indiana Geological Survey. “It also shows how inexpensive preparedness efforts can protect lives and property.”

Assistant Fire Marshal Jim Bennett (near) and Chief Fire Investigator Bob Dean experience the earthquake simulator.

The Indiana cottage is one of only three earthquake simulators in the United States. The simulator encourages public officials and individuals to be better prepared for earthquakes and educate on what can be done to lessen the dangerous effects.

More information about the simulator is available at <http://igs.indiana.edu/EarthquakeExperience/>.

Food garden grows in White River State Park

It's common knowledge that Indiana boasts a rich agricultural history. But did you know that even Indiana's most urban spaces can be used to produce local, sustainable food? With the recent slow food movement making trails into Indiana, White River State Park has teamed up with Growing Places Indy to establish the Wishard Slow Food Garden at White River State Park, a cooperative garden seeking to empower individuals and communities with the motto "Grow Well, Eat Well, Live Well, Be Well."

Growing Places Indy is a non-profit organization placing a special emphasis on urban agriculture and its culture of healthy lifestyles. Its vision is simple, yet full circle: urban agriculture yields healthier communities, a sustainable future for urban and farm land ecology, a burgeoning local food economy, and a vibrant and diverse food culture in Indianapolis – all supported by a strong local food and farm network. By promoting urban models of agriculture, Growing Places Indy seeks to introduce necessary farming skills, engage the local community in food systems, grow local leaders, inspire new farmers and food entrepreneurship, and nurture the vision required to commit to a healthier future.

Growing Places Indy currently farms on three sites, its main production site being cultivated at White River State Park. Located just off the Cultural Trail in greenspace adjacent to the Indiana State Museum and Eiteljorg Museum, the Wishard Slow Food Garden at White River State park is comprised of five agricultural beds, representing the five ways to eat locally:

- Grow your own vegetables
- Shop at a farmers' market
- Join a veggie share subscription program, or CSA (Community-Supported Agriculture)
- Shop at a food co-operative (food co-op) that sells locally grown produce or value-added products
- Eat at restaurants that source local produce

The Wishard Slow Food Garden has a 27-member veggie share program. On Wednesday mornings, volunteers from Growing Places Indy harvest vegetables from this garden for these members, who have paid in advance to receive a share of vegetables every week for ten weeks. Members come to pick up their vegetables between 4 and 6 p.m. on Wednesday evenings throughout the summer.

Growing Places Indy also sells its locally-grown, herbicide and pesticide-free produce to several restaurants in the Indianapolis downtown area, including Natural Born Juicers, Fermenti Artisan, Black Market, R Bistro, BlueBeard, Patachou, and DUOS – the "slow food, fast" restaurant and Indy Food Truck that visits White River State Park every Thursday during lunch.

The efforts of Growing Places Indy at the Wishard Slow Food Garden at White River State Park are perfectly compatible with White River State Park's commitment to healthy, sustainable lifestyles, and strong community engagement.

No butts out the car window

INDOT and the Indiana State Police remind motorists that it is illegal to improperly dispose of burning items from a moving vehicle. Despite recent showers, 87% of the state remains in severe drought and more than half the state is in extreme drought, according to the Indiana State Climate Office. The dry conditions make Indiana's roadsides extremely susceptible to burning materials.

Improperly discarded cigarettes are the leading cause of unintentional grass fires. Indiana statutes exist which the Indiana State Police may enforce in an attempt to protect citizens, property and natural resources. IC-35-45-3-3 states that a person who throws a burning material from a moving vehicle commits a Class A infraction and may receive a fine up to $10,000.

Please be aware and responsible, and report any unattended fires by calling 911.

Project Search gives opportunity to interns across the state

This month, the state's Project SEARCH Indiana team is celebrating with 99 graduates. Project SEARCH Indiana, which is coordinated by Indiana Institute's Center on Community Living and Careers, is an internship transition experience for students and young adults with disabilities. Based on a national program first established at Cincinnati Children's Hospital, the program is a collaborative effort between a work site or sites, a local school system, and Indiana Vocational Rehabilitation. Daily for eight months, interns work at their job sites - which include hospitals, corporations, and government centers - and then attends classes to gain skills in interviewing, effective communication, taking the initiative, and more.

So far this year, 27 of the 99 Project SEARCH Indiana grads have already been hired, some at their host internship sites and others in jobs in their communities. Project SEARCH 2012 graduates work an average of 25 hours per week and are paid $8.57 per hour. Armed with their newfound skills, graduates of the program who don't yet have a job work with employment specialists on researching job openings and applying for positions.

The Rachel Collins who spoke to the Project SEARCH Class of 2012 in May is not the same person who began the program the previous year. Last year, Rachel - shy and lacking self confidence - was nervous about working at the Indiana Government Center (IGC) reception desk, her first internship assignment. She had good reason to be apprehensive. People regularly approach the desk asking for information and directions. Not only did Rachel need to know her way around the building, she also had to communicate well.

"I learned that if I wanted people to have confidence in my abilities. I had to lift my head, speak loudly and clearly, make eye contact and smile," Rachel said.

That successful experience lifted her confidence significantly. Rachel's second internship was with the Department of Child Services (DCS). At DCS, she learned office skills and how to work as part of a team. Upon completion of the DCS internship, Project SEARCH helped Rachel apply for a position with Pitney Bowes. She was hired, and now operates a mail machine, sorts and delivers mail, and does other tasks as well.

"I have many friends at work; I use public transportation; I've saved money for furniture and other necessities and hope to have my own apartment with a roommate soon," a smiling Rachel shared with this year's intern group.

"My hope is that you learned from your experiences and that you use them to get a good job, too."

Reflecting on where he sat just a year ago, Spencer Becker told the Class of 2012, "I know what you are thinking, you are excited to be graduating, but you also know that you have to look for a job and start making money."

After completing his successful internship rotation with the state Facilities Management maintenance department in 2011, Spencer was offered a full time position as a maintenance technician. He works independently, changing light bulbs, helping employees move office furniture and equipment, and collecting recycling. "I am fortunate to have a job doing something I enjoy, and I learn something new every day," Spencer advised the interns.

"Congratulations on your first success, but remember, you have to believe in yourself before others will believe in you!"

Track immunizations records online

Hoosiers are now able to directly access their family's immunization records from any computer through the use of a personal identification number (PIN). The PINs can be used to log in to a secure website and check immunization history as it is recorded in the Indiana Children and Hoosiers Immunization Registry Program (CHIRP). PIN numbers can be provided by local health departments and health care providers upon the request of the patient.

Indiana is one of the first states in the nation to be able to offer this service to residents. Through MyVaxIndiana, Hoosiers have the ability to download, fax or print official proof of immunization, which can be used for school, travel or other purposes. Each record also features the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's (CDC) ACIP Immunization Schedule so parents can plan for future immunizations.

MyVaxIndiana was created by the Indiana State Department of Health through a technology grant from the Office of the National Controller. The goal is to reduce the burden and costs of physician office visits, offer a way for Hoosiers to further manage their health care, and increase Indiana childhood immunization rates.

July 25 - Governor Daniels enjoys a snack with YHCC participants during a visit to Versailles State Park. Since 2009, the Young Hoosier Conservation Corps program has put nearly 3,800 young Hoosiers to work at various properties across the state. The participants receive career information and training along with their summer employment and work experience. Seated around the picnic table are (from left) Ethan Suding, Clayton Warren, Jessica Huber, Brent Bradley, Adam Ison, Governor Daniels and Michael Brandes.

To meet the demand of more than 60 hospitals, Indiana Blood Center must see 550 donors every day. All blood types are needed, especially O-negative, which is the universal blood type that any patient can receive. One pint of blood can help up to three people. Each unit of blood can be separated into four components - red cells, plasma, cryoprecipitate and platelets. These components can help as many as three different hospital patients.
