Tornado at beginning of week, floods at the end

Camp Atterbury survives double whammy

The timing of the tornado was not just the difference between day and night – it was the difference between life and death. Camp Atterbury was struck by a tornado at 9:41 p.m. June 3. And by striking at night instead of morning, several lives were probably saved, according to Camp Atterbury State Resource Program Manager Bill Ochsner.

The tornado hit 15 trailers, destroying all of them, and totaled 13 buildings on the base. But since it was night, no one was in the trailers and few were in the buildings. And that made the difference between rescue and recovery.

Jim Engelking, Maintenance Supervisor, watched the tornado go by his house and then head three blocks away to Camp Atterbury. Moments later he was called into action. His first step was to get his employees onto camp as soon as possible. Their first concern: checking out the buildings occupied with people. David Randall, a maintenance repairman, lives in Jennings County, the furthest away of any of Engelking’s staff. Randall picked up one of the other crewmembers and they made their way to Camp.

Once on the grounds, “we walked in the dark, using only our flashlights, checking for damages and downed power lines and turning off gas to the buildings,” he said. Randall said it took three guys nearly 2½ hours to assess the damages and prevent additional problems from occurring. Engelking sent the three workers home around 5 a.m., as the regular shift workers were due in at 6 a.m. Those workers picked up where Randall and his group left off – cleaning up the debris caused by the tornado. In all, there were state employees, Title 10 soldiers and inmate labor all cleaning up from the aftermath of the tornado that touched down at Camp Atterbury.

Larry Decker, a maintenance plumber, was on vacation when the tornado hit, but he heard about it from his daughter. When he returned to work, he said that most everything was in its place, but “the trailers were gone, severely damaged vehicles were settled where buildings once were; it was orderly, but a whole new world,” he said.

Staff Sgt. Joe Watkins, a state employee currently on military leave, is assigned to Camp Atterbury (His wife is in the Indiana National Guard and his son is currently deployed to Iraq). A heavy equipment operator, Watkins said the damages done by the tornado made his job a bit more difficult than normal. “We received our orders and began the monotony of picking up what was left of the trailers and buildings,” he said. “Overall, things went pretty smoothly.”

Ochsner said the trailers housed classrooms, health services, offices and a library. The tornado’s path narrowly missed the recently re-sided chapel and its new stained glass windows. But the meditation area and gazebo were destroyed. Still, that was just the first of Two disasters to strike Camp Atterbury within a week’s time. The tornado hit Tuesday evening; the floods came rolling in Friday.

Engelking said the floods came in Friday evening and the local news media reported that Edinburgh was nearly 11 inches under water. Much of that water made its way onto Camp Atterbury.

As a result, some of the target ranges were left sitting in five feet of flood water. Two of the ranges, according to Rick Yarger, program coordinator of the ranges, were full of water.

On Saturday, following Friday’s flooding, workers were on the ranges trying to assess damages and one worker said he needed help to get the lifters off the ranges. But before help could get to him, the water came rolling in and he was trapped for two hours before he could be rescued.

Once the waters receded, workers used fire hoses to powerwash the caked-on mud, river sludge and other debris from the targets. Then they drilled holes in each of the targets to drain the water. If they find it necessary to replace the two ranges, Yarger estimates it would be somewhere around $400,000.

“The flooding of our ranges is a tremendous problem,” he said. “The Marines that are here training, this is their last chance to train before they are shipped out. We want to make sure they get all the necessary training and the flooding hinders our efforts.” In spite of the flooded ranges, the Marines continued to train until they left Camp Atterbury for Iraq.

Storms wreak havoc at home and work for state employees

It’s been said that rain falls on the just and the unjust and the recent tornadoes and rains have certainly proven the accuracy of that adage.

Bill Ragsdale, a Field Examiner Supervisor with the State Board of Accounts, made it to work on Monday morning (June 2) at his office above the town hall in Bloomfield. However, the town’s clerk treasurer suggested Ragsdale find another place to work because all the roads leading to and from Bloomfield were about to be closed. Moments later, the town hall was closed.

It seems water was coming from all directions. He made it home eventually, but not without detouring along the way. Water covered most of the highways, back roads and fields, making it difficult to determine where to drive.

A fellow Field Examiner Supervisor, Kerry Fleming, had a similar experience with his office. Housed in the basement of the Franklin city hall, Fleming’s office was flooded when city sewers backed up into the toilets. He and others in the office had to wade around in 1½ ft. of raw sewage in an attempt to salvage necessary documents. The basement also housed city records for Franklin. The contents of the basement were removed and loaded into two big dumpsters. For now, he is working out of other satellite offices across the southern part of the state.

Dave Bursten, Public Information Officer for the Indiana State Police, took it on the chin at home. His home flooded on May 30, taking on 14½” of water. He spent most of the first week of June at home, trying to clean up his property from the damaging waters.

A tornado hit within one mile of Jason Lee’s house on Tuesday, June 3. Lee is a conservation officer for DNR, assigned to Brown County. While he did not get called out that night, he responded anyway. The tornado hit around 9:40 p.m. and he worked until around 4 a.m., routing traffic away from downed power lines, closed roads, etc.

At one point, an ambulance needed to get down Beech Tree Road, but fallen trees prevented its access. So Lee, a couple of volunteer firefighters and some private citizens fired up their chainsaws and cut a path for the ambulance. It took them about three hours before the water receded, workers used fire hoses to powerwash the caked-on mud, river sludge and other debris from the targets. Then they drilled holes in each of the targets to drain the water. If they find it necessary to replace the two ranges, Yarger estimates it would be somewhere around $400,000.

“The flooding of our ranges is a tremendous problem,” he said. “The Marines that are here training, this is their last chance to train before they are shipped out. We want to make sure they get all the necessary training and the flooding hinders our efforts.” In spite of the flooded ranges, the Marines continued to train until they left Camp Atterbury for Iraq.

Storms wreak havoc that people were caught off guard and as a result, were not able to evacuate on their own. Lee and his co-workers evacuated about 40 families from the area.

Later the next day, he was dispatched to Columbus. He launched his boat from the parking lot of Long John Silver’s and set out to rescue people from the Eastbrook Plaza area. Some of the families were rescued from the roofs of their houses.

That mission complete, Lee was next called to Morgan County where he participated in a search and rescue mission and from there went to Jackson County. He spent 24 hours working the floods there and was able to help rescue two fellow officers from their overturned boats. That mission behind him, he got two hours of sleep and was sent back to Morgan County, where he pulled out a drowning victim.

Like many of his fellow officers, and several state employees across the state, sleep was a premium for Lee. But the goodness that he saw in those offering their help was enough to keep him motivated. “When everybody comes together for a common purpose, it is really refreshing,” says Lee.
Spot bonus offers instant reward

Dave Wade is the latest state employee to benefit from going the extra mile. Wade, a Physical Plant Director responsible for one-third of the 72 facilities under the jurisdiction of the Adjutant General’s Office, recently received a spot bonus award.

Adjutant General, Maj. Gen. R. Martin Umbarger praised Wade’s “quick response to get to Muscatatuck (Urban Training Center) following the June 3 tornado, and thereby saved any further destruction that could have happened when the rains came just a few days later. His quick thinking prevented our buildings from having further damage.”

For Carolyn

Carolyn Davis passed away on May 28, 2008. She worked in the Employee Relations Division of the State Personnel Department and was part of the SPD family nearly 16 years. She was loved and respected by everyone. Her warmth, her humor, her smiles are greatly missed. This drawing is dedicated to her.

Logansport State Hospital

In observance of Mental Health Awareness Month, Logansport State Hospital’s (LSH) Community Services Department sponsored a “Walk for Mental Health.” Not only did several LSH employees participate, but members of the Logansport community also showed support for the event. May is national Mental Health Awareness month. Pictured right, Paul Brock, LSH Superintendent, struts his stuff along River Bluff Trail.

Spot bonuses continue to be hailed as a great opportunity to reward employees. Maj. Gen. Umbarger recognizes the program’s value. “We like to show our appreciation to our employees for their efforts and spot bonuses are one of the best ways we can do that,” he said.

Halt! Who goes there?

New security measures will be operational by Monday, July 21 at both the north and south Indiana Government Center (IGC) buildings. As a result, public entrances will be limited to:

- South: 302 W. Washington St. (eastern-most Washington St. entrance).
- North: Robert D. Orr Plaza (center set of doors).

Both entrances will be equipped with metal detectors and screening devices, similar to what is in place at the Statehouse. State employees may use their access cards to enter at any IGC door consistent with their access card credentials. Anyone without a security access card, even those who forget their card, must enter at the public entrance.

Employees will not need their access cards to move between the two IGC buildings via the tunnels. However, entrance to the tunnel between IGCS and One North Capitol will require an access card.

Contact the Access Control Office at 317- 234-3875 with questions about access cards or visit www2.idoa.state.in.us/aco.

Second Quit to Win offers prizes

State employees seeking to quit smoking now have an extra financial motivation with the second annual “Quit 2 Win” contest – about $5,000 worth of incentives.

Prizes totaling $5,000 will be provided to the top three winners by Indianapolis Woman magazine. The grand prize winner, who successfully quits smoking from Sept. 15 to Oct. 15 and whose name is randomly drawn, will receive $2,500. Second and third place winners will receive $1,500 and $1,000, respectively.

To sign up for the “Quit 2 Win” contest, entrants must be at least 18 years of age, a legal resident of Indiana and a regular user of tobacco. In addition to signing up online at www.inshape.IN.gov, people can register wherever a “Quit 2 Win” signup box is located.

The “Quit 2 Win” boxes will be at located at many county fairs and festivals, as well as major events such as Indiana Black Expo’s Summer Celebration, the Indiana State Fair and the concerts at the White Lies.tv Lawn at White River State Park.

Indy Indians offer deals on last two home games

There are two Indianapolis Indians home games available at discounted rates for state employees. Both are Saturday games and start at 7 p.m. On July 12, the Indians take on the Toledo Mud Hens and the Famous Chicken will perform. Then on Aug. 30, it’s the Louisville Bats. This game is the home finale, boasting its annual Downtown SkyConcert and Shirt Off the Back Night.
